"Crystalline"

You were a tree, twisting and contorting your limbs around my heart, and thwarting all attempts I made to keep to my own.

You were rays of the sun; you had sown the warmth in my lucid bones, frozen deep until the touch of another seeped through every extension of my being.

You were a whisper of wind, seeing in which ways and how my spirit fluttered, and what it took for skin to shudder against the bitter cold of disregard, wounding further one already marred.
