

Justice for the Refugee:

The Refugee Experience in Great Britain During World War II

Kelly Lovell

Imagine:

- Facing persecution at home
- Trying to escape violence and constant fear
- Seeking refuge
- Middle-class
- Educated professionals
- Limitations on where you can go
- Countries closing their doors

Who are you?

WORLD WAR II REFUGEE SITUATION

Demographics

- Middle-class
- Assimilated to Western culture
- Secularized
- Well-educated
- In-sync with urban culture
- Majority Jewish, also many leading academics, Catholics, political enemies of the Nazis

NOT

- Orthodox
- Poor (after 1939)
- Eastern European
- Traditional

Inter-War Immigration

- Between 1933 and 1938, less than 10,000 Jewish refugees came to Britain from Germany
- Refugees filled niche fields or were able to create jobs: capitalists, entrepreneurs, academic and scientific experts
- Many women became domestic servants
- Immigration officers decided who came to Britain
- Immigrants couldn't work w/o permission from Ministry of Labor
- Refugees had support of English communities and organizations
- Rising anti-immigrant sentiments

Immigration Regulations

- Context:
 - Global depression
 - High unemployment in Britain
- Government concerned an influx of refugees would fuel anti-semitic, anti-immigrant, pro-fascist campaigns
- 1938: British government began requiring visas from Germany
 - Many refugees found this process time-consuming, nerve-wracking and difficult

Sir Oswald Mosley

Jewish Child Refugees (1939)

Kindertransport

- Government program in conjunction with refugee organizations
 - Only 10,000 spots for Jewish children
- Parents register children to be sponsored and fostered by a British family
 - Very difficult and uncertain process
- Children had to be financially guaranteed by their host family

Kindertransport: Experiences

- Most children ended up in good homes
- Mostly Jewish families

HOWEVER

- Negative psychological effect
- Culture shock
- Reality did not reflect expectations

Ingrid Jacoby

- Twelve years old
- Uncertainty regarding fate of parents
- Required to learn English and go to local school (St. Joseph's Secondary school)
- Feels very out of place
- Gradually becomes more comfortable
 - Refers to foster parents as “Mummy and Daddy” after a year
 - Feels inferior at times
- Settles into life
- Converts to Christianity
- Moves to Oxford after finishing school

Role of British Government

- Very hesitant to accept large numbers of refugees
- 1938 – Required visas from Germany to enter the country as a refugee
 - Effort to decrease immigration
- Failed to decrease numbers
 - Between 1938 and 1940- 60,000 refugees entered Britain
- Attempted to send refugees to colonies
 - Failed: colonies could only accept a handful of specific professionals
- Organized groups to go to Palestine
 - Creation of Israel in the 1948

Internment: Classification

- During World War I, the British government interned thousands of “enemy aliens”
- Classified foreign nationals into 3 categories
 - Category A: enemy aliens with known Nazi sympathies (interned)
 - Category B: enemy aliens with possible ties to mother country (liberties restricted)
 - Category C: enemy aliens who had no ties with mother country or were persecuted under the regime (allowed to carry out their lives)
- Immigrants and refugees had to go in front of a tribunal to be categorized

Internment

- Process began in May 1940
- New Prime Minister Winston Churchill gave the order to “collar the lot”
- All category A, all category B and male category C enemy aliens from Austria and Germany living by the Southern and Eastern coast of Britain interned
- Initially sent to temporary camps

Internment

- Sent to the Isle of Mann – a popular vacation spot
 - Interned stayed in hotels, hostels and boarding houses
 - Rationed, but adequate food
 - Curfew
 - Censored news
 - Entertainment options
 - Under 24 hour watch
- Over 27,000 people were interned in the summer of 1940
 - 4,000 women

Reasons for Internment

- The British government released their reasoning behind their internment policy for refugees
 1. Most refugees were unemployed and a “drain on resources”
 2. Refugees could be targets of attacks by anti-semitic, anti-alien or pro-fascist groups during air raids
 3. Refugees requested to be interned
 4. Acting under military advisement

Internment: The End

- Due to overcrowding and a lack of resources, some internees were shipped to camps in Australia and Canada
- September 1940, the British Government realized their mistake
- Gradual release of refugees
 - Category A immigrants remained due to their Nazi sympathies
- Public hysteria surrounding immigrants died down
- Re-integration
 - Some psychological damage and loss of trust in government
 - Most refugees were understanding and forgiving

Roland Hill

- Born Ronald Hess, in Hamburg, Germany to Jewish parents
- Lived in Prague, Vienna and Milan during the 30s
- Converted to Catholicism while living in Vienna
- At 17, immigrated to Britain alone with nothing but a £5 note
- Stayed in a Catholic hostel and eventually moved to Bloomsbury House
 - Received a 25 shilling allowance per week
- Gained connections and friendships with prominent Catholic leaders

Roland Hill's Internment

- Hill was interned due to ethnic profiling
 - A police officer came to pick up his friend and took Hill as well
- Initially taken to Bury St. Edmunds in Suffolk, England
- Interned on the Isle of Mann as a “unfriendly alien”
 - Accommodations: boarding houses and hostels
 - Entertainment came from the refugees themselves
 - Observed that German Jewish internees were still very patriotic and attached to German cultural traditions
- After a month, Hill was sent to a camp in New Brunswick, Canada.
- In November, 1940 Hill was released and went back to England to join the Pioneer Corps

During the War Years

- Refugees pleasantly surprised by the determination to defeat Hitler
 - “The Blitz brought out the best of them”
- Overall, warm and thankful to British people
