5-2012

Use of Dialogue Journals to Support Independent Reading in a Fourth Grade Classroom

Kylie Armstrong
The College at Brockport, armstrong.kylie@gmail.com

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.brockport.edu/ehd_theses

Part of the Elementary Education and Teaching Commons

To learn more about our programs visit: http://www.brockport.edu/ehd/

Repository Citation
https://digitalcommons.brockport.edu/ehd_theses/179

This Thesis is brought to you for free and open access by the Education and Human Development at Digital Commons @Brockport. It has been accepted for inclusion in Education and Human Development Master's Theses by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @Brockport. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@brockport.edu.
Use of Dialogue Journals to Support Independent Reading in a Fourth Grade Classroom

by

Kylie Armstrong

May 2012

A thesis submitted to the Department of Education and Human Development of the State University of New York College at Brockport in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Science in Education
Use of Dialogue Journals to Support Independent Reading in a Fourth Grade Classroom

by

Kylie Armstrong

May 2012

APPROVED BY:

Advisor

Date

Director, Graduate Programs

Date
Summary ................................................................................ 20

Chapter Three: Methods and Procedures ................................................... 21

Introduction ............................................................................. 21

Context ................................................................................. 21

School .......................................................................... 21

Fourth Grade Class ........................................................... 22

Participants .................................................................... 23

Data Collection Instruments ......................................................... 26

Observations .................................................................. 26

Students’ Journal Writing Samples and Teacher’s Journal Feedback 27

Interviews ...................................................................... 27

Procedures .......................................................................... 28

Data Analysis ........................................................................... 29

Summary ................................................................................ 31

Chapter Four: Results .......................................................................... 33

Introduction ............................................................................. 33

How does writing in a dialogue journal support students’ understanding of their independent reading? ................................................................. 33

Engagement with Reading and Writing ........................................... 34

Within Text Thinking .................................................................. 40

Beyond Text Thinking .................................................................. 43

Questioning .............................................................................. 44
Predicting ............................................................. 46
Inferring ............................................................... 47
Making Connections ................................................ 48
Beyond Text Thinking and Teacher Feedback .................. 50
Common Patterns Across Focal Children for Understanding
Independent Reading ......................................................... 54
How does writing in a dialogue journal support writing for a specific audience? .......................................................................................................... 55
Use of Dialogue Journal Checklist ....................................... 56
Use of Teacher Feedback ................................................... 61
Common Patterns Across Focal Children for Writing for a Specific
Audience .......................................................................................................... 68
How does writing in a dialogue journal support critical appreciation of book and reading attitude? ..................................................................................... 68
Observed Comments and Behaviors ....................................... 68
About Text Thinking ................................................................. 75
Common Patterns Across Focal Children for Critical Appreciation of Book and Reading Attitude ................................................................. 81
Summary ................................................................................ 82
Chapter Five: Conclusions and Implications ................................. 84
Overview .................................................................................. 84
Conclusions ............................................................................. 85
List of Illustrations

Illustration 4.1: Anna Dialogue Journal Letter 1 ............................................. 35
Illustration 4.2: Anna Dialogue Journal Letter 2 ............................................. 36
Illustration 4.3: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 4 ............................................. 38
Illustration 4.4: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 1 ............................................. 41
Illustration 4.5: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 3 ...................................... 41
Illustration 4.6: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 1 .......................................... 42
Illustration 4.7: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 2 .......................................... 42
Illustration 4.8: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 2 .......................................... 43
Illustration 4.9: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 1 ...................................... 44
Illustration 4.10: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 1 .................................... 44
Illustration 4.11: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 4 .......................................... 45
Illustration 4.12: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 6 .......................................... 45
Illustration 4.13: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4 .......................................... 45
Illustration 4.14: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4 .......................................... 45
Illustration 4.15: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 6 .................................... 46
Illustration 4.16: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 6 .................................... 46
Illustration 4.17: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 2 .......................................... 47
Illustration 4.18: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 5 .......................................... 48
Illustration 4.19: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4 .......................................... 48
Illustration 4.20: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4 .......................................... 49
Illustration 4.21: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 5 .......................................... 49
List of Tables

Table 2.1: Systems of Strategic Actions: Ways of Thinking Within, Beyond, About Texts.................................................................14

Table 3.1: Research Schedule.................................................................28

Table 4.1: Students’ Use of the Dialogue Journal Checklist.........................58

Table 4.2: Book Titles.................................................................................63
Abstract

This was an inquiry-based research study exploring the impact of using dialogue journals to support independent reading within a fourth grade classroom. The research was qualitative in nature and featured multiple case studies. The overarching aim of this study was to investigate the following question: How does using a dialogue journal to support independent reading impact students' learning? The study sought to answer this question by exploring how writing in dialogue journals supports students' understanding of their independent reading, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of books and reading attitude. Data collection included observations, interviews, and writing samples from dialogue journals. This data was then coded for understanding of reading, writing for an audience, and critical thinking about the text. Analysis showed all students indicated a positive attitude toward dialogue journals and an appreciation for the texts they had chosen to read. Most students were able to demonstrate their comprehension within their dialogue journals, and all students could be pushed to deeper thinking by the feedback from their teacher. Students kept their audience in mind by writing about the parts of their text they found interesting. Limitations to this study were the small number of participants and the short duration of the study. Future studies may seek to follow a larger population of students over the course of a year or multiple years.
CHAPTER ONE: INTRODUCTION

Background

As a substitute teacher, I noticed an alarming trend during the time designated for independent reading; few students were actually engaged in their chosen texts. During my informal observations of sustained silent reading (SSR), the time designated for students to silently read books of their own choice for a specified period of time, I noticed students chatting with their peers, getting stuck in books that were beyond their comprehension, repeatedly getting up to exchange their book for another, or glancing through books far below their reading level. In the gradual release theory, teachers expect students to transfer the comprehension skills modeled and practiced during shared and guided reading experiences to their own independent reading choices (Fisher & Frey, 2008). However, during my informal observations of the time designated for independent reading, students were not showing the engagement with their chosen texts necessary for the type of thinking and comprehension expected by their teachers. I began to wonder how teachers could hold their students accountable for thinking deeply about their text during independent reading.

During my student teaching placement in a fourth grade classroom, students struggled putting their thoughts about a text into writing. Each week students read a text selection from a basal reading series as a whole class, and during this whole class reading, the teacher would stop to check for understanding by asking comprehension questions. In preparation for the end-of-selection test, the teacher would then supply students with a series of comprehension questions about the text that they would answer in writing. Students could verbalize answers to comprehension questions during the whole class reading, but many struggled when they were asked to put those thoughts to paper. Unfortunately for the students, testing looks solely at the ideas students can write about rather than the thoughts they can articulate verbally. A lingering question following the completion of my student teaching was how I could better prepare students to demonstrate their understanding of what they have read through writing.

Dialogue journals represent a potential solution to both the issue of holding students accountable for thinking deeply about their independent reading and preparing students to demonstrate their understanding of a text through writing. Dialogue journals are an ongoing correspondence between teacher and student about the book the student has chosen to read independently. By writing letters back and forth on a consistent basis, the student is accountable for demonstrating his or her personal understanding of the book and the teacher has the opportunity to probe for deeper understanding. The student must also clearly articulate his or her thoughts in writing for a specific audience. When students are in the habit of writing about their reading, there may be less of a struggle when it comes time to answer those end-of-selection test comprehension questions.
Purpose of the Study

The overarching aim of this study was to pursue an inquiry into the following question: How does using a dialogue journal to support independent reading impact students’ learning? I was more specifically interested in students’ learning as it relates to reading and writing.

The study sought to answer this question by exploring the following sub-questions:

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal support students’ understanding of their independent reading?
2. How does writing in a dialogue journal support writing for a specific audience?
3. How does writing in a dialogue journal support critical appreciation of books and reading attitude?

To answer these questions, the researcher collected and analyzed several sources of data including observations, interviews, and writing samples from dialogue journals. The first sub-question addressing students’ understanding of their reading required data tracking evidence of students’ comprehension and thinking about their text. The second sub-question required data demonstrating how students clearly articulated their thoughts when writing for the specific audience of their teacher. To determine how writing in a dialogue journal may support critical appreciation of reading and attitude, the third sub-question, the researcher needed data revealing students’ feelings as they relate to reading and writing about their reading in a dialogue journal.

Rationale

In the 2001 report that became the groundwork for No Child Left Behind (NCLB), the National Reading Panel (NRP) reported that, "...the Panel was unable to find a positive relationship between programs and instruction that encourage large amounts of independent reading and improvements in reading achievement, including fluency" (pp. 12-13). According to No Child Left Behind (NCLB), educational programs and practices must be proven as effective through scientific research, but in their report, the NRP did not find a significant amount of scientifically-based evidence supporting the effectiveness of independent reading programs. Independent reading programs featuring large amounts of independent reading alone such as the sustained silent reading (SSR) I observed require modifications.

Teachers may modify their independent reading program to include dialogue journals as a tool for facilitating deeper thinking and improving reading achievement. A key topic today is differentiating instruction, and dialogue journals represent an opportunity to tailor instruction to the individual needs of students. Teachers have the flexibility to decide what type of modeling, prompting, or questioning a student needs at that particular point in time based on what their student has written in their journal letter. The tailor-made feedback provided by teachers may benefit the student in other reading and writing settings as well.
Dialogue journals are grounded in social constructivism, an approach maintaining that social interaction is a requirement for learning and cognitive development. According to Lev Vygotsky (1978), this learning and cognitive development takes place within the zone of proximal development (ZPD), or the distance between what a student can do independently and what a student can do with the guidance of a more expert other. In dialogue journals, the interaction between the text, student, and teacher shapes the literacy development of the student. When teachers differentiate their feedback on an individual basis, they are working within the ZPD of their individual students. Through dialogue journals, teachers are able to push their students' thinking to levels they would be unable to reach alone. While the student has much to gain from this interaction, the process is mutually beneficial because writing in dialogue journals informs the teacher's instruction.

Study Approach

This was an inquiry-based research study exploring the impact of using dialogue journals to support independent reading. The research was qualitative in nature and featured multiple case studies. Data collection included observations, interviews, and writing samples from dialogue journals. These methods were most appropriate in pursuing the researcher’s inquiry and helped tell a story about the fourth grade students in this classroom.

The thesis is composed of five chapters. The first chapter is an introduction to the study touching on the background, research questions, and rationale for conducting the study. Chapter Two is a review of the literature influencing this study. In the third chapter, the thesis delves more deeply into the methodology and methods employed for data collection. Chapter Four analyzes the data and highlights significant issues while the final fifth chapter concludes and summarizes the thesis.

Summary

My observations as a substitute teacher and student teacher left me with lingering questions about how teachers could hold their students accountable for thinking deeply about their text during independent reading and how teachers could prepare students to demonstrate their comprehension of a text through writing. Dialogue journals represent a potential answer to both of these questions. By writing letters back and forth on a consistent basis, the student is accountable for demonstrating his or her personal understanding of the book and the teacher has the opportunity to probe for deeper understanding. The student must also clearly articulate his or her thoughts in writing for a specific audience. The overarching aim of this study was to investigate the following question: How does using a dialogue journal to support independent reading impact students' learning? The study sought to answer this question by exploring how writing in dialogue journals supports students’ understanding of their independent reading, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of books and reading attitude. According to No Child Left Behind (NCLB), educational programs and practices must be proven as effective through scientific research, but in their report, the NRP did not find a significant amount of scientifically-based evidence supporting the effectiveness of independent reading programs. Teachers may modify their independent reading program to include dialogue journals as a tool for facilitating deeper thinking and improving reading achievement. This was an inquiry-based research study looking into the impact of using dialogue journals to support independent reading. The research was qualitative in nature and featured multiple case studies. Data collection included observations, interviews, and writing samples from dialogue journals.
CHAPTER TWO: LITERATURE REVIEW

Introduction

This chapter reviews the literature that has influenced this study. The first section looks at how using dialogue journals as a teaching practice is consistent with social constructivism. The next section examines how dialogue journals are supported by reader response theory. There then is a section delving into three levels of comprehension and how students use their dialogue journals to demonstrate those levels of understanding and thinking. I also review the current literature regarding dialogue journals while paying special attention to their benefits and challenges.

Social Constructivism

The written exchange that takes place between teacher and student in dialogue journals leads to the type of learning that is consistent with the work of Lev Vygotsky (1978). According to Vygotsky, social interaction is necessary for learning, and learning will take place when that interaction is with a more knowledgeable, expert other. Optimally, the more expert other will support and challenge the learner within the zone of proximal development (ZPD). The ZPD is the area between what a learner can do alone, their actual development, and the highest level of what the learner may be able to do as an adult, their potential development. In order for learning to take place, the more expert other should target their instruction to take place within the learner’s ZPD (Vygotsky, 1978).
Using dialogue journals, teachers can individualize their instruction by responding to each student within his or her zone of proximal development. The teacher acts as a more expert other, and through the social interactions in letters back and forth, is able to push students to cognitive levels of thinking they would be unable to reach alone. By prompting, questioning, and modeling in their written responses, teachers can guide their students into deeper understanding. Just as social constructivism requires students to take an active role in thinking and constructing new knowledge, reader response theory also asks students to be actively involved in learning and reaching new understandings.

Reader Response Theory

The responses recorded by students in their dialogue journals are supported by the work of Louise Rosenblatt (1978, 1982, 1995) in reader response theory. Dialogue journals are a forum for students to personally respond to the text that they are reading independently. The response a reader has to a text may be described as aesthetic or efferent (Rosenblatt, 1982). An aesthetic response is an emotional response and characterized by an ongoing “transaction” between the reader and the text. When readers respond aesthetically, they are continuously interacting with the text. An efferent response to a text is driven by cognitive purposes and may be characterized by a search for facts. Rosenblatt (1995) maintains that readers respond to a text on an efferent-aesthetic response continuum. A reader will blend aesthetic and efferent responses as they think about a text. Instructional practices should emphasize and incorporate both efferent and aesthetic purposes for reading, and the dialogue journal is one instructional practice that promotes both efferent and aesthetic transactions with the text.

Looking through the lens of reader response theory, dialogue journals become an opportunity for students to write from their unique perspectives. Each child’s unique perspective includes his or her personal insights, knowledge base, and past experiences. The background a reader brings to the reading event includes such factors as gender, ethnicity, culture, and socioeconomic status (Rosenblatt, 1978).
These factors make reading a highly unique event conditional to the circumstances of the reader at the time they are reading the text (Rosenblatt, 1978). These different backgrounds and factors result in multiple interpretations of the same text, and this is allowed for and encouraged within a responsible framework of reading (Rosenblatt, 1978). Dialogue journals permit differing interpretations of the same book, and the teacher has the option of determining if interpretations fall within a responsible framework. The teacher may ask or prompt students to expand upon their ideas or support their beliefs with evidence from the text. The way a student responds to or interprets a text is the make-up of their comprehension.
Comprehension

Engaged and Effective Reading

In order for students to practice productive independent reading, the students must be engaged in their reading choices. Students must also know how to act as an effective reader. Scharer, Pinnell, Lyons, and Fountas (2005) describe effective readers as being capable of within, beyond, and about the text thinking. Following the descriptions of these three ways of thinking is a table adapted from Pinnell and Fountas (2009) outlining the strategic actions, or comprehension strategies, used to process a written text.

Thinking Within the Text

When a reader thinks within the text, he or she comprehends at the literal level. In the case of fiction, the reader must follow the story and be able to identify the characters. In the case of non-fiction, the reader must identify the topic and learn facts relating to that topic (Scharer et al., 2005). A reader must understand the text and be able to recall important information automatically; this may include recalling specific details or summarizing important information (Pinnell & Fountas, 2009).

Thinking Beyond the Text

By combining the text with his or her own knowledge and experiences, the reader is able to think beyond the text. The reader uses his or her background knowledge and past experiences to make sense of the text. Beyond text thinking may include making predictions about the text and later confirming or rejecting those predictions based on what is read. Connecting with the characters and imagining their feelings are also examples of beyond text thinking. A reader may “read between the lines” to infer what an author is implying but not directly saying (Scharer et al., 2005). When students think beyond the text, their interpretations of the same book may differ slightly from one another’s (Pinnell & Fountas, 2009). This phenomenon is consistent with reader response theory and the unique transactions each reader makes with the text.

Thinking About the Text

Thinking about the text is the highest level of thinking because it requires the reader to take a step back from the text. The reader may notice the author’s craft or appreciate the particular language that has been used. The reader might also critique the writing and offer admiration or condemnation. In non-fiction, the reader may distinguish the underlying text structure (e.g. compare/contrast). An observer may perceive the reader noticing organization features and using them to find information. This type of thinking and awareness may lead to better writing (Scharer et al., 2005). Whenever students indicate they like an author’s style, the subjects an author writes about, the way the story is organized or told, or an author’s use of language, they are thinking about the text (Fountas & Pinnell, 2009).

Supporting Effective Reading

Teachers must provide daily support in effective reading. This support comes during interactive read aloud, shared reading, and guided reading as well as independent reading. Interactive read aloud is a time for teachers to facilitate thoughtful discussion about text; students learn how to talk to one another about books. During shared reading among a small group, discussion involves articulating thinking as it relates to a text. This opportunity extends understanding and reminds students that reading is about meaning. In guided reading, a teacher's book introduction may ask students to engage in all three types of thinking. During independent reading, teachers should be conferring with individual students (Scharer et al., 2005).
Table 2.1 Systems of Strategic Actions: Ways of Thinking Within, Beyond, About Texts¹

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ways of Thinking</th>
<th>Systems of Strategic Actions for Processing Written Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Thinking Within the Text</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Solving Words</td>
<td>Using a range of strategies to take words apart and understand what words mean when reading continuous text</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monitoring and Correcting</td>
<td>Checking on whether reading sounds right, looks right, and makes sense</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Searching for and Using Information</td>
<td>Searching for and using all kinds of information in the text</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summarizing</td>
<td>Putting together important information while reading, and disregarding irrelevant information</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maintaining Fluency</td>
<td>Integrating sources of information in a smoothly operating process that results in expressive, phrased reading</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adjusting</td>
<td>Reading in different ways as appropriate to the purpose for reading and the type of text</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thinking Beyond the Text</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Predicting</td>
<td>Thinking about what will follow while reading continuous text</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Making Connections</td>
<td>Searching for and using connections to knowledge gained through personal experiences, learning about the world, and reading other texts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Personal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• World</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Text</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Synthesizing</td>
<td>Putting together information from the text and from background knowledge in order to create new understandings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferring</td>
<td>Going beyond the literal meaning of a text to think about what is not there but is implied by the writer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thinking About the Text</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Analyzing</td>
<td>Examining elements of a text to know more about how it is constructed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Critiquing</td>
<td>Evaluating a text based on personal, world, or text knowledge</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

¹Note: Descriptions of within, beyond, about text thinking. Adapted from When Readers Struggle: Teaching That Works (p. 18), by G.S Pinnell and I.C. Fountas, 2009, Portsmouth, NH: Heinemann.
Extending Response through Writing

Dialogue journals are a written conference between teacher and student. Students’ letters provide evidence of what type of thinking a student is engaging in while they read. If the teacher notices that a student is mostly summarizing what they have read, the teacher may prompt the student to write about personal connections they have made with a character. Findings from research studies looking at extending reading through written response suggest that when students continually write in the process of reading a text, they reach understandings beyond summarization or literal recall (Hancock, 1993). One of the largest factors in extending these written responses to higher levels of thinking is the teacher moves, or support coming from teachers through prompts, questions, or reinforcement (Hancock, 1993).

Dialogue Journals

Purpose and Topics of Dialogue Journals

Dialogue journals are informal written conversations between two people about a chosen topic over an extended period of time. The chosen topic of the dialogue journal can vary greatly based on the purpose the teacher has in mind for the exchange of letters. The purpose of the dialogue journal relates to the student population the teacher is working with; teachers have used dialogue journals with English language learners, special needs students, general education students, adult learners, pre-service teachers, among other populations. The purpose and topics discussed in the dialogue journals vary based on the needs of the student population.
When Anderson, Nelson, Richardson, Webb, and Young (2011) researched the use of dialogue journals with academically and behaviorally challenged students, the purpose of the dialogue journal was to build a relationship between the teacher and student. The topics of the letters were centered on the students’ emotions about school, their home life, or their peers and coping with those feelings (Anderson et al., 2011).

The purpose of a dialogue journal exchange between a teacher and his or her English language learners may have a significantly different purpose than the one described above for academically and behaviorally challenged students. Holmes and Moulten (1997) investigated using dialogue journals as a learning strategy with ESL university students. The purpose of the dialogue journals was for the teacher to model fluent writing and the students to practice writing fluency. Because their purpose was to increase writing fluency, students could choose a topic that they were comfortable writing about.

In this study, the researcher will be exploring the use of dialogue journals with fourth grade students in a general education classroom. The purpose of the dialogue journal is to respond to literature, and the topics of students’ letters will be dependent on their independent reading choices. Donna Werderich (2002, 2006) has completed several research studies looking into using dialogue journals to respond to literature with intermediate and middle school age students.
Using Dialogue Journals as a Response to Literature

Although dialogue journals have been used for a number of purposes, this study is most interested in reviewing research related to using dialogue journals as a response to literature. The research of Donna Werderich will factor greatly into this review because her purposes and the student populations she has worked with most closely match my own.

Werderich (2002) examined using dialogue journals as a means for differentiating reading instruction among seventh grade students in an advanced reading class. The study explored how teachers respond to students in dialogue journals and how dialogue journals were used to promote personalized learning. Journal entries from fifteen students and their teacher were analyzed during the course of a school year, and the following four teacher response patterns emerged: student interests, personal discoveries, setting challenges, and teaching strategies. These response patterns were seen to be the catalyst in promoting personalized reading instruction. The teacher’s responses addressed personal student interests through author or genre recommendations. The teacher guided students through her questions and comments in making personal discoveries about the meaning of titles, author style, plot structure, and techniques of comprehending. The teacher always attempted to set challenges by asking a significant question to get the student thinking about the book he or she was reading; the developmental level of the student was an important factor in setting challenges. The teacher’s responses were classified as teaching strategies whenever she included reinforcement of a skill taught during mini-lessons in the readers’ workshop. Werderich (2002) found that the one-on-one written conversation allowed the teacher to personalize learning for her students.

Werderich (2006) continued her research in using dialogue journals as a response to literature by examining how middle school teachers utilized dialogue journals and the processes they used to respond to students’ written responses. Three middle school teachers, Mrs. C, Mrs. L, and Mr. D, and their 53 students participated in the study. By analyzing dialogue journals, teacher interview transcripts, and teacher observation notes, the researcher found the role of the teacher to be complex and ever-changing. Werderich (2006) described a response continuum upon which teacher responses fluctuated between being instructional, conversational, or instructional/conversational. Instructional responses included direct scaffolding or literacy understanding development. Conversational responses reflected more freedom for the teacher and student to experience literature. Werderich’s (2006) findings suggest that dialogue journals were an effective way to individualize the literacy development of middle school students. The teachers felt they were engaging in an ongoing scaffolding process unique to the needs of their students.

Benefits and Challenges of Using Dialogue Journals

The benefits of using dialogue journals among different student populations, academically and behaviorally challenged students and English language learners included, were abundant. Regan (2003) supports using dialogue journals with emotionally disturbed students for the following four reasons: Dialogue journals encourage low-achieving students to engage in the writing process; dialogue journals offer an opportunity for students to express their feelings appropriately; dialogue journals allow teachers to regularly teach and reinforce social skills in their responses; and dialogue journals strengthen the teacher-student relationship. English language learners have also experienced benefits in using dialogue journals. Holmes and Moulten (1997) saw an increase in writing fluency and motivation when using dialogue journals with ESL students in an urban university.

Using dialogue journals as a teaching practice is not without its challenges. Anderson et al. (2011) noted the period of time in which the teacher exchanged dialogue journals with her students needed to be extensive for growth in the relationship between teacher and student to occur. Holmes and Moulten (1997) acknowledge that writing in a dialogue journal is an extremely time-consuming task for the teacher. Although fluency was reported as increasing in English language learners’ dialogue journals, it was not established whether that fluency transferred to any other writing contexts (Holmes & Moulten, 1997).

When dialogue journals are used for the purpose of responding to literature, there are benefits for both teachers and students. Werderich (2006) found that the three middle school literacy teachers were able to model quality journal responses and their students took on the belief that reading is thinking. Similarly to the academically and behaviorally challenged students, Werderich (2006) also found evidence of teachers forging strong relationships with their students as individuals. Teachers were able to model reading for pleasure, which in turn promoted lifelong reading practices to their students (Werderich, 2006).
There are also challenges to using dialogue journals for responding to literature. Due to the uniqueness of the dialogue journal process for each student, there is a lack of generalizability. Werderich (2006) warns that asking too many questions may hinder a student’s ability to respond freely and aesthetically to the literature. Dialogue journals may become too teacher-dominated when the teacher should actually be acting as a facilitator (Werderich, 2006).

Summary

This chapter was a review of the literature that has influenced this study. The written exchange that takes place between teacher and student in dialogue journals leads to the type of learning that is consistent with the work of Lev Vygotsky (1978). The teacher acts as a more expert other, and through the social interactions in letters back and forth, is able to push students to cognitive levels of thinking they would be unable to reach alone. The responses recorded by students in their dialogue journals are supported by the work of Louise Rosenblatt (1978, 1982, 1995) in reader response theory. Dialogue journals become an opportunity for students to write from their unique perspectives. Scharer, Pinnell, Lyons, and Fountas (2005) describe effective readers as being capable of within, beyond, and about the text thinking. The chosen topic of the dialogue journal can vary greatly based on the purpose the teacher has in mind for the exchange of letters. When dialogue journals were used as a response to literature, Werderich (2002) found that the one-on-one written conversation allowed the teacher to personalize learning for her students.
CHAPTER THREE: METHODS AND PROCEDURES

Introduction

This inquiry-based research study was designed to explore the impact of using dialogue journals to support independent reading on students’ learning as it relates to reading and writing. The methods in this study addressed how writing in dialogue journals supported students’ understanding of their independent reading, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of texts. This chapter defines the methods and procedures of the study by first describing the context of the school, classroom, and participants. The chapter then describes the data collection instruments and procedures for implementing those instruments in detail before delving into how the data will be analyzed.

Context

School

This study took place in a school district located within a rural community in Western New York. The school district was comprised of 1,201 students in pre-kindergarten through twelfth grade. There were two buildings: an elementary school housing PreK-6 students and a junior/senior high school housing grades 7-12. The racial makeup of the students was 93 percent white, 5 percent Hispanic/Latino, and 2 percent African-American/black. In terms of socioeconomic status, 27 percent of students in the district were eligible for free lunch, and 11 percent of students were eligible for reduced-price lunch. One percent of students were classified as limited English proficient (New York State Education Department, 2011).

The elementary school was a PreK-6 building, and in the 2009-2010 school-year, the total enrollment numbered 601 students. The student body was 91 percent white, 6 percent Hispanic/Latino, and 2 percent African-American/black. The elementary school had an average class size of twenty students, and there was a 96 percent attendance rate. At 46 percent, nearly half of the school qualified for free or reduced-priced lunch. One percent of students were classified as limited English proficient (New York State Education Department, 2011).

Fourth-Grade Class

The classroom within which this study took place was a fourth-grade general education classroom comprised of twenty-four students, ten male and fourteen female. Although these students were all white, they were diverse in the socioeconomic status of their families. The layout of the classroom consisted of six round tables that seated four students and a small rectangular table in the center of the room. On one wall, there was a whiteboard adjacent to a SMART Board, and on the opposite wall was another whiteboard. In addition to the SMART Board, the available technology included five computers, an overhead projector, and a CD player with headphones. There were several bulletin boards devoted to what the students were currently studying in science, mathematics, and social studies. The day was arranged so that there was a 15 minute block of time for spelling directly followed by guided reading/centers. While the teacher worked for a half hour with a guided reading group, the other students worked at one of the following centers: computer, reading, writing, or listening. During the ELA hour-long block at the end of the day, the teacher worked from the Harcourt basal series on a reading passage, grammar skill, and focus skill.

The classroom teacher in this study was Lynn Vendetti, a veteran teacher of eighteen years who has spent fifteen of those years teaching in the school district featured in this study. She first earned her Bachelor of Science in Psychology before attending graduate school to earn her Master of Science in Elementary and Special Education. She is certified to teach grades PreK-6. Mrs. Vendetti opened her classroom to the researcher, Kylie Armstrong, for her thesis project on using dialogue journals in conjunction with independent reading to support student learning.

Participants

This study featured eight focal children from Mrs. Vendetti’s fourth grade classroom. Lena was a nine-year-old white female. She was a highly motivated, energetic learner and described as being very creative and inquisitive. She aspired to write for the school newspaper and was an above-average learner in reading and mathematics. At the end of third grade, she scored at the sixth grade level on the Basic Reading Inventory (BRI), and her score of 703 placed her within the level four performance range on the New York State (NYS) English Language Arts (ELA) assessment. Lena also performed within the level four range on the NYS mathematics assessment.
Cameron was a nine-year old white male and an above-average learner in reading and mathematics. He was a motivated, cooperative student and well-liked by his peers. There were mild health concerns with intestinal issues, but this did not affect his school achievement. At the end of third grade, he scored at the fourth grade level on the BRI, and his score of 696 placed him within the level four performance range on the NYS ELA assessment. Cameron also performed within the level four range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Jane was a nine-year-old white female and a slightly above-average learner in reading and mathematics. Jane was a sweet girl with an infectious smile. She was a hard-worker and always put in her best effort. At the end of third grade, Jane scored a 691 on the NYS ELA assessment, which placed her in the level three performance range. She also performed within the level three range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Ethan was a nine-year-old white male and a slightly above-average learner in reading and mathematics. Ethan was described by his peers and his teacher as a “smart-aleck.” He was sarcastic in nature, which caused some friction with his classmates; however, he is well-liked by his male peers. Ethan was an avid reader of fantasy-based fiction. At the end of third grade, Ethan scored a 687 on the NYS ELA assessment, which placed him within the level three performance range. Ethan also performed within the level three performance range on the NYS mathematics assessment.
Nora was a nine-year-old white female and an average learner in reading and mathematics. Nora was a hard-worker but unorganized when it came to keeping her schoolwork together. Her belongings were spread out around her table area, and she would often lose homework that she had completed. At the end of third grade, Nora scored a 659 on the NYS ELA assessment, which placed her within the level two performance range. Nora also performed within the level two performance range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Mason was a nine-year-old white male and a slightly above-average learner in reading and mathematics. Mason was a nice, funny boy. He often needed reminders for appropriate behavior due to his class clown antics. Mason did not view himself as a reader and would often describe it as “boring.” At the end of third grade, Mason scored a 680 on the NYS ELA assessment, which placed him in the level three performance range. Mason also scored within the level three performance range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Anna was a nine-year-old white female and an average learner in reading and mathematics. She was a nice, polite girl and was very responsible. She had anxiety speaking in small and large groups but gained confidence as the year progressed. She struggled with time management and usually needed extra time to finish assignments and tests. As a part of Response to Intervention (RTI), Anna was classified as Tier 2 and received 30 minutes of pull-out reading instruction. At the end of third grade, she scored an instructional level 38 on the Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA). On the third grade NYS ELA assessment, Anna’s score of 661 placed her within the level two performance range. She also performed within the level two range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Gavin was a nine-year-old white male and an average learner in reading and mathematics. He was a quiet, serious boy and his teacher described him as very cooperative and nice. He needed close monitoring for organizational and responsibility skills. A major concern with Gavin was his weak attendance and tardiness rate. In third grade, he missed 48 days of school. He scored at the fourth grade level on the BRI at the end of third grade. Gavin’s score of 656 placed him within the level two performance range on the NYS ELA assessment. Gavin performed within the level three range on the NYS mathematics assessment.

Miss Armstrong earned her Bachelor of Science in Education and is certified to teach grades PreK-6. She is currently completing her Master of Science in Education with a major in childhood literacy. She has student-taught in the school district featured in this study and is also a substitute teacher.

Data Collection Instruments

Several data collection instruments were used to explore the impact of dialogue journals on student learning. Data was gathered from multiple sources of information including observations, students’ journal writing samples, teacher’s journal feedback, and interviews.

Observations
Each week I conducted two observations in the fourth grade classroom. These observations took place during the time designated for guided reading and centers. Using the field note observation form as a guide (see Appendix A), I recorded notes related to the focal children’s observable behaviors in using dialogue journals and their engagement with their independent reading. These observations took place for the duration of the study.

Students’ Journal Writing Samples and Teacher’s Journal Feedback

At the end of each week, I collected and scanned copies of the entries the students and their teacher had added to the dialogue journals. Any information or names revealing the students’ identities was deleted. In these journal entries, I looked for evidence of students’ understanding of their independent reading as well as their use of teacher feedback. I also intended to find demonstration of a critical appreciation for reading.

Interviews

In the final week of the study, I conducted an interview with each focal child to learn additional information and add reliability to what I have observed. The interview was semi-structured and consisted of at least eight questions (see Appendix B). If a follow-up question pertinent to the study arose from a student’s answer, I followed that path of thinking.
Procedures

The study was planned to take place for five weeks as seen in Table 3.1. During the first four weeks, I conducted observations every Monday and Wednesday. For the duration of the study, each Friday I scanned copies of the students’ writing samples and teacher feedback in the dialogue journal entries. During the final fifth week, I administered an interview with each of the eight focal children.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Week</th>
<th>Research Schedule</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>One</td>
<td>❖ Conduct two observations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Collect and scan dialogue journals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two</td>
<td>❖ Conduct two observations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Collect and scan dialogue journals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Three</td>
<td>❖ Conduct two observations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Collect and scan dialogue journals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Four</td>
<td>❖ Conduct two observations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Collect and scan dialogue journals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Five</td>
<td>❖ Conduct one observation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Collect and scan dialogue journals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>❖ Administer interviews with focal children</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Data Analysis

The analytical framework for this study included the demonstration of reading comprehension through writing, writing for a specific audience, and demonstrating critical appreciation of texts, and I coded my findings based on this framework. The study drew from multiple domains of data to increase the validity of the findings, and each question was answered according to multiple domains or sources of data. This triangulation of data helped to increase the reliability of the study.

The first research question asked how writing in a dialogue journal supports students' understanding of their independent reading. Active engagement with the text is a precursor to comprehension and understanding. Each observation field note was coded for students' visible engagement with their independent reading as well as their engagement with writing. The students were provided with a two-sided bookmark that lists ideas to jumpstart their thinking on what to write about in their dialogue journal (see Appendix C). The observer looked for evidence of the students using the “Connect with the Book” side of the bookmark. The students’ dialogue journal entries were collected as artifacts and their writing was coded for within and beyond text thinking (Fountas & Pinnell, 2006). Within-text thinking is characteristic of literal recall while beyond-text thinking demonstrates deeper understanding. Students’ answers to interview questions were analyzed and coded for student thinking related to how dialogue journals support their understanding of their independent reading.
The second research question inquired about how writing in a dialogue journal supports writing for a specific audience. In any school-based writing, whether it is comprehension test questions or informal journal entries, students must be aware of their audience and articulate their thoughts effectively. This question sought to answer how students write for the specific audience of their teacher. During my observations, I looked at students’ visible use of teacher feedback like reading or rereading the letter from their teacher. I also looked for evidence of students using the dialogue journal checklist (see Appendix D), which denotes what the teacher, as their audience, is looking for. In the students’ dialogue journals, I coded any teacher prompts or questions, and then highlighted if the student used that feedback in the following entry. I reviewed the dialogue journal entries to see whether the student had addressed the needs of their audience based on the dialogue journal checklist. In the interviews with the focal children, I asked how they decided what to write about, how they used their teacher’s feedback, and how they used the checklist in order to better inform my observations and findings in their work samples.

The third research question asked how writing in a dialogue journal supports students’ critical appreciation of their reading. The dialogue journal gives readers a forum for writing about and discussing their reading. They may use their dialogue journal to write about favorable or unfavorable opinions of their reading. During my observations, I looked for students’ positive or negative behaviors and listened for comments that helped me to gauge their critical feelings toward their current book choice. I also looked for visible use of the “Analyze and Critique the Book” side of the bookmark (see Appendix C). In my observations, I looked for students’ attitudes toward the dialogue journal center. In students’ dialogue journal entries, I coded any about text thinking (Fountas & Pinnell, 2006). This about text thinking includes any writing that expresses criticism of the book or analysis of the author’s craft. In the interviews, I asked students about their feelings about the dialogue journaling process as well as their feelings about writing about reading. To demonstrate critical thinking and appreciation for books, the students must form opinions about the book or the process and support them with evidence.

Summary

This inquiry-based research study was designed to explore the impact of using dialogue journals to support independent reading on students’ learning as it relates to reading and writing. The methods in this study addressed how writing in dialogue journals supports students’ understanding of their independent reading, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of books and reading attitude. This study took place in a school district located within a rural community in Western New York comprised of 1,201 students in pre-kindergarten through twelfth grade. There were two buildings: an elementary school housing PreK-6 students and a junior/senior high school housing grades 7-12. The classroom within which this study took place is a fourth-grade general education classroom comprised of twenty-four students, ten male and fourteen female. The study featured the following eight focal students from veteran teacher Mrs. Vendetti’s fourth-grade classroom: Lena, an above-average learner; Cameron, an above-average learner; Jane, a slightly above-average learner; Ethan, a slightly above-average learner; Nora, an average learner; Mason, a slightly above-average learner; Anna, an average learner; and Gavin, an average learner. Data was gathered from multiple sources of information including observations, students’ journal writing samples, teacher’s journal feedback, and interviews. During the first four weeks, I conducted observations every Monday and Wednesday. For the duration of the study, each Friday I made scans of the students’ writing samples and teacher feedback in the dialogue journal entries, and during the final fifth week, I administered an interview with each of the focal children. The analytical framework for this study included the demonstration of reading comprehension through writing, and I coded my findings based on this framework. Understanding of reading, writing for an audience, and critical thinking about the text will be coded.
CHAPTER FOUR: RESULTS

Introduction

This study focused on the uses of dialogue journals in supporting fourth graders during independent reading. This chapter will describe these findings through the analysis of the observations and interviews conducted by the researcher as well as the students’ responses and teacher feedback recorded in dialogue journals.

This chapter is organized around the overarching research question asked in Chapter One inquiring how using a dialogue to support independent reading will impact students’ learning as well as the three accompanying sub-questions seeking to answer how writing in a dialogue journal supports students' understanding of the independent reading, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of books and reading attitude. The following three sections will examine and be organized around those three sub-questions. The final section will be a summary of the results.

How does writing in a dialogue journal support students’ understanding of their independent reading?

Students’ understanding of their independent reading was measured through their observed engagement with reading and writing, the within and beyond text thinking demonstrated in their dialogue journals, and their responses to interview questions related to comprehension.
Engagement with Reading and Writing

Nine observations were conducted in Lynn Vendetti’s fourth grade classroom during the time designated for dialogue journals. In the dialogue journal center, students spent fifteen minutes reading from their independent reading choice and then responded in their dialogue journal. For the first fifteen minutes of these observations, I watched for students’ engagement with their independent reading. For the following fifteen minutes, I observed students as they wrote responses in their dialogue journals.

According to Scharer, Pinnell, Lyons, and Fountas (2005), a student must act as an effective, engaged reader to practice productive reading. Therefore, during my observations, I was looking for the students’ engagement with their texts that is the precursor to comprehension.

Students who were engaged in neither their reading nor writing were more likely to produce vague entries that lacked deeper thinking and demonstration of comprehension. The following are excerpts taken from my field note observation forms related to Anna’s engagement with the reading and writing process. In the first observation, Anna demonstrated some very severe avoidance behaviors that negatively affected her reading comprehension.

Anna was the last student to select a book and spent most of the fifteen minutes for reading looking around the classroom library. She would select a book, take a step towards her seat, then turn around, and put it back. This process went on nearly the entire fifteen minutes allotted for reading. (Reading Engagement; Observation 1)

Anna continued reading before being given a reminder to start writing. She opened her journal then got out her chap stick. She received another reminder. She wrote the date and greeting and checked those items off the list. (Writing Engagement; Observation 1)
The letter Anna wrote during this first observation contained no instances of within, beyond, or about text thinking. She had only a greeting, the title, and the author of the book recorded.

Illustration 4.1: Anna Dialogue Journal Letter 1

In the second observation, she engaged with her reading but again exhibited avoidance behaviors when it came to writing; however, after a prompt for a verbal explanation of what she had read was given, Anna was able to successfully engage in writing in her dialogue journal. Prompting Anna with a verbal explanation first was the scaffolding she needed to transition into a written explanation of her book. In her second dialogue journal letter, Anna describes in detail the contest that the characters in her story will be entering and the designs they will be submitting.

Anna pulled the book she started last week out of her pouch and immediately began reading. Anna had much more time to read when she already had a book picked out. (Reading Engagement; Observation 2)

Anna asked to use the bathroom before starting to write. She returned and sat staring at the page and flipping between pages. When I came over to prompt her to write, she had the date and greeting. I asked her what her book was about, and she gave me a verbal explanation about the contest Judy Moody and her brother are in. I asked her if she could write about that contest in her journal, and she nodded yes. (Writing Engagement; Observation 2)
By the fifth observation, Anna was looking much more comfortable as an engaged reader and writer. The engagement she was showing with her reading and writing placed her in the position to demonstrate her comprehension. Anna recognized the importance of being engaged in her book choice during her interview.

Anna’s bookmark shows she is about halfway through her Judy Moody book. She read quietly before beginning her letter. Anna is comfortably engaged both as a reader and a writer.

(Reading and Writing Engagement; Observation 5)

How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?

It helps me understand my book better because I have to write down what is going on in my book. I have to pay attention.

(Reading and Writing Engagement; Anna Interview Question 1)

If a student was engaged with his or her reading, it did not necessarily mean that he or she would be engaged in their writing. The main means of demonstrating comprehension is through writing, and those who did not engage in the writing could only superficially discuss what they had read. Mason showed wonderful engagement with his reading; however, the time he spent writing his dialogue journal letters shows he was more focused on finishing than demonstrating comprehension. The following excerpts are taken from observation field notes related to Mason’s reading and writing engagement.

Mason immediately pulled out his R.L Stine book from the previous week. Mason showed engagement with reading his R.L. Stine book. (Reading Engagement; Observation 2)

Mason finished his journal entry early. (Writing Engagement; Observation 2)

Mason immediately began writing his letter about How to Eat Fried Worms after returning his book and was done quickly. Although Mason shows a great attitude toward reading, I think he could spend more time on his writing. (Writing Engagement; Observation 5)

Students who were not engaged in their reading but were in their writing were also more likely to produce vague entries that lacked demonstrations of comprehension. Certain students on some days would go straight to writing in their dialogue journals. This could be because they had taken their book home to read and forgotten to bring it back in, or they were reading their book on a Kindle at home that could not be brought to school. Students who were not engaged in their reading just prior to writing in their dialogue journals were less likely to demonstrate within or beyond text thinking.

On the day of my fourth observation, Nora asked if she could start her letter right away about the book she was reading on her Kindle. The resulting letter is very vague. Nora calls the book interesting, but she does not give any details to support that opinion.

Nora: “I got a kindle for Christmas, and the book I am reading is on it. Is it okay if I just start my letter?”
Teacher: “Do you feel like you can remember your book enough to write about it?”
Nora: “Yes.” Nora wrote steadily for about fifteen minutes. I could see her neat, precise cursive.
(Writing Engagement; Observation 4)

Illustration 4.3: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 4

Students who were engaged in both their reading and writing were more likely to have produced dialogue journal letters that demonstrated comprehension. In the case of Jane, she preferred to both read and write at the same time. She would read, write about what she had read, and return to her reading during the course of the half hour center for dialogue journals. The following excerpts are taken from observation field notes related to Jane’s reading and writing engagement. In Observation 2, Jane demonstrated comprehension as she was engaged and thinking about her reading. She made a prediction, rejected it, and then confirmed it again. Her dialogue journal entry contained those same thoughts.
Jane was writing and reading at the same time. She called me over to show me that she had first thought the story was about Jesus, then thought it was actually about kittens being born, then confirmed that she was right the first time. (Reading and Writing Engagement; Observation 2)

Jane tried out her reading and writing approach again in Observation 5. This time she used differently colored pens to track her thoughts each time she stopped to write, and her resulting letter demonstrated both within and beyond text thinking. Jane was clearly constructing meaning from the text as she read.

Jane: “Can I read and write at the same time?”
Teacher: “You can try it that way today. Stop to record your thoughts about something you read before you start reading again.”
(Reading and Writing Engagement; Observation 5)

Each time Jane paused to write, she used a different color pen to record her thoughts. Jane’s color-coded approach will give me a look into the way she organizes her thoughts.
(Reading and Writing Engagement; Observation 5)

Ethan is an avid reader of books in the fantasy genre, and observing him reading showed the engagement necessary to comprehend a text. In the first and third observations, Ethan showed comfort in engaging with reading for an extended period of time.

Ethan pulled book out of his pouch and had his head on his elbow, grasping book in one hand. Ethan was very engaged in his reading and seemed very comfortable with reading for an extended period of time. (Reading Engagement; Observation 1)

Ethan showed me the book he had brought from home that he is still reading. He read steadily and quietly for fifteen minutes in his typical slouched over position. (Reading Engagement; Observation 3)

Ethan spends time constructing his dialogue journal letters as evidenced in Observation 4.
Ethan got right to work on his letter, and he spent nearly fifteen minutes writing it. Ethan is very engaged with writing in his dialogue journal. (Writing Engagement; Observation 4)

Ethan does much of his reading at home, and he would sometimes forget to bring his book to school. When he does remember to bring his book like he did in Observation 6, he is very engaged, or absorbed, in his reading. He is also engaged in his writing, and he often demonstrates beyond text thinking by wondering about what will happen next in his series.

Ethan: “I remembered my book today!” Holds it up high in the air.
Ethan read in his usual slouched over state. He kept reading until students were asked to find a stopping point and start their letter. He becomes absorbed in what he is reading. He needed to be prompted to begin his letter. (Reading Engagement; Observation 6)

Within Text Thinking

Each instance of within text thinking was highlighted and coded in students’ dialogue journals. In their dialogue journals, all students demonstrated within text thinking, or literal comprehension. The types of within text thinking demonstrated included both retelling details from the text and summarizing important information.

When writing in a dialogue journal was first introduced, many students’ letters consisted solely of within text thinking. In her first letter, Nora is very vague as she sums up what her book is mainly about. Nora made it clear in her interview that summarizing what happens in her book is a step she takes when deciding what to write about in her dialogue journal.
Illustration 4.4: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 1

How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal? First I'll go through your letter to answer any questions. Then I usually talk about what book I'm reading and I will summarize what happens in the book. (Summarizes; Nora Interview Question 2)

Students reading nonfiction showed a greater tendency to solely retell or summarize in their letters. In his second dialogue journal letter, Cameron wrote about a nonfiction text he had been reading about NFL players. He simply listed the names and number of years the football players had been in the NFL.

Illustration 4.5: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 3
Over the course of several weeks, Gavin was reading a "How To" book. He seemed to copy directly from the book the parts of the passage he found important in his literal retelling. In his interview, Gavin revealed that he often has to narrow his writing down to what he thinks are the best details.

Illustration 4.6: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Illustration 4.7: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 2
How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal? There are tons of details in my books so I have to pick out the best details to write down in my journal. (Within Text Thinking; Gavin Interview Question 2)

Nora also read a “How To” book, and her second letter also retells information straight from the text.

Illustration 4.8: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 2

Beyond Text Thinking

The dialogue journal letters were analyzed and coded for instances of beyond text thinking. Four types of beyond text thinking emerged from the students’ journal entries including questioning, predicting, inferring, and making connections. As the students became more comfortable with the process of reading and writing in their journals, the retellings and summaries were accompanied by instances of beyond text thinking. The following are examples of beyond text thinking that the students demonstrated on their own without any elicitation from the teacher’s feedback. Most of the examples come from higher-achieving students.
Questioning

In the cases of these students’ dialogue journals, questioning was very similar to prediction. Students would sometimes explicitly state a question asking what might happen next in the story as Cameron did in his first dialogue journal letter. Cameron kept up with the action in the story by asking questions about what might happen next.

Illustration 4.9: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Illustration 4.10: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Other times students would write “I wonder…” questions as they contemplated the coming events in the story as Ethan did in his fourth and sixth dialogue journal letters and Jane did in her fourth. Ethan and Jane were thinking about the events of the story and what might happen as a result.
Illustration 4.11: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 4

[Handwritten text]

Illustration 4.12: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 6

[Handwritten text]

Illustration 4.13: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4

[Handwritten text]

Illustration 4.14: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 4

[Handwritten text]
Predicting

Efficient readers make predictions as they read and are able to reject or confirm them with evidence from the text. The two students who made predictions were two of the students who would also ask questions as they read. In his sixth dialogue journal letter, Cameron made two predictions about the characters in the story. In her second dialogue journal letter, Jane first made a prediction, rejected the prediction, and then confirmed that she was actually correct the first time. In her interview, Nora noted how writing in her dialogue journal has made her think more about what could happen next.

Illustration 4.15: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 6

Illustration 4.16: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 6
How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?

Knowing that I have to write in my journal makes me think and understand more. I think about what will happen and make predictions.
(Prediction; Nora Interview Question 3)

Inferring

Students need to be able to infer, or “read between the lines,” to comprehend their text. When a student infers, they are taking what they already know and combining it with what they have read in order to form a unique interpretation of the text. Students who made inferences were often farther along in their chosen text, and the text was usually fiction. The following is an excerpt of an inference made by Ethan in his fifth dialogue journal letter. Ethan takes the knowledge he has of villains and their ulterior motives and infers that if an evil troll chooses to help someone, he must want something in return.
Making Connections

Making connections occurs when readers connect new knowledge from the text with their prior knowledge. Connections may be made to one’s self (text to self), to another text (text to text), or to an event or idea in the world (text to world).

Connecting with characters and imagining their feelings are also examples of making connections.

Jane became very adept at making connections with the characters in Skylark by Patricia Maclachlan. The family had made the tough decision to leave the prairie during a drought while Papa stayed behind with the land, and Jane connected with the sadness of this separation. She also places herself in the character’s shoes as she imagines their feelings.
Gavin made a text to self connection in his third dialogue journal letter. He was reading a passage about not talking on a cell phone when you cross the street, and he commented that even he should pay attention to this survival tip because he is the owner of a cell phone.
Beyond Text Thinking and Teacher Feedback

Many times instances of beyond text thinking coincided with prompts or questions from the teacher feedback. This is important to note because it is in alignment with the belief that the teacher can scaffold student thinking through carefully constructed questions or prompts. Although several higher-achieving students demonstrated beyond text thinking on their own, all students no matter their achievement level were able to demonstrate beyond text thinking when responding to the written feedback from the teacher.

Making connections was the type of beyond text thinking most often elicited by the teacher feedback; however, the teacher feedback also led to some instances of inferring. For students who solely demonstrated within text thinking, asking them to make connections was a natural step in scaffolding their thinking. Anna, Gavin, Mason, and Nora commonly produced either vague journal entries or letters that focused solely on retelling information. With prompting for the teacher, they each demonstrated beyond text thinking by making connections.

In Anna’s third letter, she responded to the teacher’s question by siding with which character she thought should win the crazy strips contest. She also provided a reason for her opinion.

Illustration 4.25: Anna Teacher Response 2

Which crazy strip drawing do you like better?

Illustration 4.26: Anna Dialogue Journal Letter 3

Anna connected with the character in her text again when she responded to whether Judy got a good animal for her class project.
Although his response is very succinct, Gavin made a text-to-self connection when he responded to my question about whether he would ever use the survival tips described in his book. His answer of yes shows that he finds the author’s tips to be useful in his own life.
Mason described an incident about a snake being on a boy’s leg in his R.L. Stine book. In my response, I probed him to think about this incident further by asking how he would feel about having a snake on his leg. Mason then made a text-to-self connection in his next response.

Interestingly, in this same letter, Mason described an incident in the book and made a text-to-self connection on his own. Through scaffolding, Mason was able to pick up on the type of thinking I was looking for in these journals.
Illustration 4.33: Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 2

After noting the similarity of the titles of two texts Nora had read, I questioned her to see whether the two texts reminded her of one another. This triggered Nora to note a lack of a text-to-text connection between these two texts.

Illustration 4.34: Nora Teacher Response 4

Illustration 4.35: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 5

Common Patterns Across Focal Children for Understanding Independent Reading

Students who were engaged in both their reading and writing were more likely to have produced dialogue journal letters that demonstrated comprehension. These students were more likely to be the higher-achieving students like Jane and Ethan.
Students who were engaged in neither their reading nor writing, reading but not writing, or writing but not reading were more likely to produce vague entries that lacked deeper thinking and demonstration of comprehension. Any student could demonstrate this lack of engagement, but the students most consistent in demonstrating these behaviors were the low and average achieving students.

When writing in a dialogue journal was first introduced, many students’ letters consisted solely of within text thinking; however, as the students became more comfortable with the process of reading and writing in their journals, the retellings and summaries were accompanied by instances of beyond text thinking. The higher-achieving students were more likely to demonstrate beyond-text thinking with no prompting from the teacher’s feedback, but all students no matter their achievement level were able to demonstrate beyond text thinking when responding to the written feedback from the teacher. Students reading nonfiction showed a greater tendency to solely retell or summarize in their letters, no matter their achievement level.

How does writing in a dialogue journal support writing for a specific audience?

When students wrote in their dialogue journals, they were writing for the specific audience of their teacher. Although these dialogue journals were an informal way of expressing their thoughts about their independent reading, the teacher had a very specific set of expectations that came in the form of the dialogue journal checklist (see Appendix D). The dialogue journal checklist was reviewed and attached to the inside cover of each student’s journal when dialogue journals were... first launched. Based on this checklist, students learned the expectations held by their audience for their dialogue journal letters. Observations, dialogue journal entries, and interview answers have been analyzed for how students keep their audience in mind when writing in their dialogue journals.

Use of Dialogue Journal Checklist

During the dialogue journal center, students were observed for how they proceeded in writing a dialogue journal entry. When dialogue journals were first launched, I observed students making checks on their dialogue journal checklists as they wrote their letters. This behavior ceased once students were comfortable with the process of writing in their dialogue journals. The dialogue journal checklist was a valuable scaffold in the beginning of the process but became obsolete as the class delved further into the dialogue journal exchange. Anna, Cameron, Ethan, and Lena illustrate how the dialogue journal checklist was used early on to help students get their letters started. After the second observation, students very rarely returned to their checklists.

Anna wrote the date and greeting and checked those items off the list. When she finally began writing, she used the checklist as a guide.
(Use of checklist; Observation 1)

Anna returned and sat staring at the page and flipping between pages. When I came over to prompt her to write, she had the date and greeting.
(Use of checklist; Observation 2)

Cameron began using his dialogue journal checklist without any prompting. When I came over to check on him because he had missed the introduction day, he had already made a series of checks. When asked if he needed any help, he shook his head no and said “I get it.”
(Use of checklist; Observation 2)
Ethan: “What could I write? Oh. Okay. The date.” Ethan has a sarcastic nature, but he did demonstrate that he understood the use of the checklist. (Use of checklist; Observation 1)

Ethan scanned over his journal and said, “Way more than 5 sentences,” before he slammed his journal shut. His comment about the 5 sentences shows he was thinking about what is required by his audience. (Use of checklist; Observation 2)

Lena glanced around to check on others. She then looked over her checklist and started writing. (Use of checklist; Observation 1)

Although the students did not use the dialogue journal checklist after the initial weeks of dialogue journals being used, many of the students articulated the expectations for using the checklist in their interviews. Ethan and Gavin were more honest in their answers about decreasing their use of the checklist. Nora also touched on how she had internalized the steps in her head to use as she was writing her letter.

Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
I used it in the beginning, but I don’t really use it anymore. (Use of checklist; Ethan Interview Question 5)

Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
I don’t really use it. It’s important so I should use it. (Use of checklist; Gavin Interview Question 5)

Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
First I write the date. Then I write Dear Miss Armstrong. I kind of just go down the list. (Use of checklist; Anna Interview Question 5)

Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
At the end, when I am all done writing I go back to the checklist. If anything is missing, I try to add it. I also think about the steps while I am writing. (Use of checklist; Nora Interview Question 5)
Each student's dialogue journal letter was analyzed using the checklist to see how they met the expectations of their audience. The following table takes certain items from the checklist and finds the percentage of how often each student met that item.

Table 4.1 Students’ Use of the Dialogue Journal Checklist

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Student</th>
<th>Anna</th>
<th>Cameron</th>
<th>Ethan</th>
<th>Gavin</th>
<th>Jane</th>
<th>Lena</th>
<th>Mason</th>
<th>Nora</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Greeting</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>75%</td>
<td>83%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Closing</td>
<td>0%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>50%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>67%</td>
<td>33%</td>
<td>67%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What happened</td>
<td>83%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>83%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>33%</td>
<td>56%</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What I think</td>
<td>33%</td>
<td>44%</td>
<td>83%</td>
<td>44%</td>
<td>91%</td>
<td>78%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>78%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Responded to teacher</td>
<td>40%</td>
<td>13%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>38%</td>
<td>63%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>50%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Makes sense</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>89%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>89%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 Sentences</td>
<td>83%</td>
<td>33%</td>
<td>67%</td>
<td>78%</td>
<td>45%</td>
<td>13%</td>
<td>89%</td>
<td>78%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The first two items, the greeting and the closing, had to do with the expected structure of the dialogue journal entry. Students were very consistent in opening with a greeting (e.g. Dear Miss Armstrong), but were somewhat what less consistent with finishing with a closing (e.g. Sincerely, Name). This lack of a closing may have been due to time constraints in some cases as students had to move on to their next center.

The next two items, what happened and what I think, had to do with how the students demonstrated their comprehension. Most students were very consistent in summarizing or retelling what had happened in their book. Despite being an above-average learner, Lena included what happened in her dialogue journal letters only 33 percent of the time. As her audience, this made it more difficult for me to keep up with what her book was about, and I had to go off of the opinions and ideas she presented as her own thoughts. Anna, Cameron, and Gavin were the least likely to write about what they thought of their book. As described earlier, Anna was very anxious about the writing process and her summaries represented a marked improvement in writing for an audience. Cameron and Gavin very often presented only the facts of their nonfiction texts rather than their thoughts. I will delve further into the fifth item in the following section, use of teacher feedback.

When writing for an audience, it is very important that the audience can easily make sense of what has been written. This was the case in nearly every journal entry from every student. Cameron once did not distinguish who “they” was in his text, and Lena had to stop mid-entry when she was called away to a meeting.

The last item, writing five sentences, was an attempt to make sure students spent enough time writing to truly express themselves. When I compared the student who most consistently wrote at least five sentences, Mason, with the student who most rarely wrote five sentences, Lena, I found a discrepancy between quality and quantity. Although Mason had met the requirement, his thoughts could be termed vague and lacking in substance while Lena’s shorter entries contained many of her own highly developed thoughts. The following two entries are a comparison of Mason and Lena’s typical work. Although Mason’s has five sentences, it lacks the thought expressed by Lena in her three sentences.
Illustration 4.36: Lena Dialogue Journal Letter 5

I would prefer nonfiction because I really dislike fiction. I don't know why. I've learned a lot like that. With a book of nonfiction, the author's views are made very evident. The soft drinks are made of sugar, as well.

Illustration 4.37: Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 6

The book I'm reading now is Bone, the author is Jodi Smith. I'm on page 82. It's really good. I really want to read more.
Use of Teacher Feedback

Along with being observed for how they used the dialogue journal checklist, students were also observed for how they used their teacher’s feedback in writing their next letter. The most commonly observed behavior was the student reading or rereading their letter from the teacher before beginning to write their next letter. Unlike the checklists, the observed behavior of students using the teacher’s feedback continued for the duration of the study. Students of all achievement levels spent time reading the feedback from the teacher.

Cameron glanced over the teacher’s letter before beginning to write. He read my response before starting his own. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 6)

Ethan: “What if I want to write about a different book I’m reading now? Do I answer your questions about the old one first and then write about my new one?” Ethan was able to answer his own question about what to do when starting a new book. This tells me he understands what I am looking for in his dialogue journal letters (their thoughts about what they are currently reading). (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 2)

Jane read comfortably for fifteen minutes. She flipped between pages of my response and her new letter. Jane continues to be very engaged with the process. She is likely using the teacher feedback in her next letter. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 7)

Lena: Down on one knee at her seat. Flipping between journal pages as she writes. Lena’s flipping between two pages shows me she was using the feedback provided in the teacher response in her next letter. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 2)

Lena: “Is it alright if I answer your questions first?” Lena studied my letter carefully. When the timer went off to begin writing in their journals, Lena commented that she had only just begun to read again after answering my questions in her letter. The fact that she spent nearly fifteen minutes answering my questions shows that she is thinking more deeply when she answers. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 4)
Lena read my letter before she started reading and again after she had read. Lena is really thinking about how to respond to the questions I ask. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 5)

Mason visibly flipped between pages in his dialogue journal. Mason was likely reading and responding to the teacher feedback/questions. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 3)

Nora reread the teacher feedback and highlighted the two questions that had been asked in the teacher’s letter. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 3)

Although students were observed reading the teacher’s feedback, it did not necessarily mean they would respond to the teacher’s prompts or questions in the following letter. In Observation 6, Cameron was seen perusing the teacher’s letter, but he did not respond to the question asked of him by the teacher.

Cameron began a new book today. After reading for fifteen minutes, he very quickly looked over my letter before starting his own. Cameron has a habit of skipping over responding to my questions when he has started a new book. (Use of teacher feedback; Observation 7)

Illustration 4.38: Cameron Teacher Response 5

Illustration 4.39: Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 7

Students who changed their book often were less likely to consistently respond to the teacher’s prompts or questions. The following table shows the students’ book choices and the amount of time they spent reading and writing about that book. The shaded areas are text titles that students spent three or more observations reading and writing about.

Table 4.2 Book Titles

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observation</th>
<th>Anna</th>
<th>Cameron</th>
<th>Ethan</th>
<th>Gavin</th>
<th>Lena</th>
<th>Mason</th>
<th>Nora</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Judy Moody Saves the World! by Megan McDonald</td>
<td>The Battle Begins By Tony Abbott</td>
<td>How to Survive Almost Anything By Brooks Whitney</td>
<td>The Glass Castle By Jeannette Wells</td>
<td>Tattoo of Death By R.A. Montgomery</td>
<td>Ghost of Fear Street By R.L. Stine</td>
<td>Dolphin Tale By Gabrielle Reyes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Howliday Inn By James Howe</td>
<td>The Edge Chronicles: Beyond the Deepwoods By Paul Stewart and Chris Riddell</td>
<td>The Witness By Robert Westall</td>
<td>Skylark By Patricia Maclachlan</td>
<td>Story of the Earth By Stuart Malin</td>
<td>The Girls Book: How to Be the Best Everything By Juliana Foster</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>N.F.L.'s Best Players</td>
<td>Jackie Robinson</td>
<td>Sports Illustrated: Baseball’s Stars</td>
<td>Frogs (Non-fiction)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>How to Eat Fried Worms By Thomas Rockwell</td>
<td>Headless Ghost By R.L. Stine</td>
<td>Snakes Alive in X-Ray Vision By Patricia Maclachlan</td>
<td>Sarah Plain and Tall By Patricia Maclachlan</td>
<td>Bone By Jeff Smith</td>
<td>War Horse By Michael Morpurgo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Let’s Get Invisible</td>
<td>James Howe Book</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td></td>
<td>Snakes and Lizards</td>
<td>Inside the Slidy Diner</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>By Megan McDonald</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

63
When Gavin was reading How to Survive Anything by Brooks Whitney for the first three observations, he was very consistent in responding to the teacher’s prompts; however, once he began changing his book every one or two observation, he no longer responded to questions. Instead he would launch into an explanation of his new book.

Illustration 4.40: Gavin Teacher Response 3

Do you think the author gives good advice/tips?

Illustration 4.41: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 4

Answer:

Illustration 4.42: Gavin Teacher Response 5

I'm surprised Indians use poison from frogs. Do you think they use it to hurt people?

Illustration 4.43: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 6

I'm reading Spokes Alive in Spanish, and it's a lot of fun!
Students who read their books for an extended period of time were more likely to respond to teacher prompts. Both Ethan and Lena responded to the teacher’s feedback 100 percent of the time. They were engaged and thinking about the same book for nearly the entire length of this study. Remaining actively engaged in their texts may have made their desire to discuss their book greater than those who did not spend much time with a text. The following excerpts from Ethan and Lena’s dialogue journals reflect their typical responses to the teacher’s feedback for the duration of the study.

Illustration 4.44: Ethan Teacher Response 2

You said Twig thinks he is a woodtroll until sky pirates are after him. Why do you think the sky pirates are after him? Maybe he’s something

Illustration 4.45: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 3

Because his goat was taken away from him and he loved it.

Illustration 4.46: Ethan Teacher Response 5

What do you think he will want Twig to do for him?
Illustration 4.47: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 6

Instead of the trial activity, something he just discovered...

Illustration 4.48: Lena Teacher Response 2

Are there any similarities between the big bang and creation?

Illustration 4.49: Lena Dialogue Journal Letter 3

I've never heard that question before! Maybe if you have any similarities, but if that doesn't happen, then certainly.

Illustration 4.50: Lena Teacher Response 9

interesting. It's hard to believe the earth is constantly shifting beneath your feet! I can't wait to hear more about your reading.

Illustration 4.51: Lena Dialogue Journal Letter 10

[Handwritten text not fully legible]
When students were asked how they use the feedback from the teacher in their letters, the answer common among students was to answer the teacher’s questions before moving on to write more about what was currently happening in their book. Nora noted that she reads the teacher’s letters first in case she is asked to make a prediction. One of the most interesting responses came from Lena, who found that the feedback with the teacher helped to develop a positive rapport between the teacher and herself.

How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
I usually see what questions you have in your letter and answer them. Then I write down what happens in my book.
(Use of teacher feedback; Anna Interview Question 4)

How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
Mostly I use your feedback by answering back to your letter before I write any new stuff.
(Use of teacher feedback; Cameron Interview Question 4)

How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
I usually write the answers to your questions first. Sometimes you write, “What do you think will happen?” so I have to make sure I answer that before I start reading my book.
(Use of teacher feedback; Nora Interview Question 4)

How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
The checklist says to respond to the teacher, so I usually answer your questions. The subject that I was writing about a lot is one that people aren’t really on the same page as me. It was nice to read what you wrote because I like knowing that there’s a person who is on the same page. It makes me feel like I am not the only one.
(Use of teacher feedback; Lena Interview Question 4)
When dialogue journals were first launched, I observed students of all achievement levels making checks on their dialogue journal checklists as they wrote their letters. This behavior ceased once students were comfortable with the process of writing in their dialogue journals.

The most commonly observed behavior was the student reading or rereading their letter from the teacher before beginning to write their next letter. Unlike the checklists, the observed behavior of students using the teacher’s feedback continued for the duration of the study. Students of all achievement levels spent time reading the feedback from the teacher. Students who changed their book often were less likely to consistently respond to the teacher’s prompts or questions. Students who read their books for an extended period of time were more likely to respond to teacher prompts.

How does writing in a dialogue journal support critical appreciation of book and reading attitude?

Students’ critical appreciation of reading was analyzed through students’ observed interactions with their reading choices, the about text thinking demonstrated in their journals, and their interview responses related to critical appreciation of reading.

Observed Comments and Behaviors

The comments students made during the dialogue journal center were analyzed for how they demonstrated a critical appreciation of reading. Analysis showed all students indicated a positive attitude toward dialogue journals and an appreciation for the texts they had chosen to read. There were also some unfavorable opinions of text indicated, which is also a part of thinking critically about reading.

Students who demonstrated a positive attitude toward writing in the dialogue journal indicated a willingness to stay on task, an acceptance of the dialogue journal expectations, and a desire to communicate with their audience. In the very first observation, Gavin resisted attempts by a classmate to distract him and worked hard on his first letter. In the fourth observation, Gavin’s question about when I would next be visiting the classroom indicated that he had a desire to continue communicating through his dialogue journal.

Gavin was one of the first to begin writing in his journal. His neighbor, a low-achieving girl, tried to take his book but he grabbed it back and continued writing without saying anything to her. Gavin showed his excitement about writing a letter again when he grabbed back his book to make sure he stayed on task. He would not allow any distractions from the task at hand. (Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Observation 1)

Toward the end of my time in the classroom, Gavin asked when I would be returning. This tells me he enjoys the process. (Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Observation 4)

When the expectations for dialogue journals were first explained, the class as a whole was taken through the steps on the dialogue journal checklist. During her perusal of the list, Jane’s acceptance of the dialogue journal expectations was noted through her comment about how reasonable the checklist seemed.
During reading/taping of checklists:
Jane: “This seems reasonable.”
Jane looked over the checklist and thought that the expectations for the dialogue journals sounded reasonable.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Observation 1)

In the third observation, Lena enthusiastically requested that I read her journal letter before leaving the classroom. This request indicated a desire to communicate with her audience through the dialogue journal.

Lena came over to show me that she had written “Christ” in capital letters for to highlight the word three times. She begged me to read her letter before I left. Lena is very passionate about her reading choice, and she is excited to have someone read her writing.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Observation 3)

The comments and behaviors of students during the dialogue journal center demonstrated the support of dialogue journals in encouraging an appreciation for reading. Critical appreciation was demonstrated through comments related to the desire to continue reading, the choice to read during personal time, and the excitement about progressing through a text. When Ethan was asked to begin his journal letter in Observation 3, he indicated a desire to continue reading. Lena also indicated a desire to continue reading in Observation 4.

Ethan complained that he only had 2 pages left in his chapter before getting to work on his journal letter. Ethan is an active reader, so I was not surprised by his unwillingness to pause and write in his journal.
(Appreciation of reading, desire to continue reading; Observation 3)

When the timer went off to begin writing in their journals, Lena commented that she had only just begun to read again after answering my questions in her letter. I told her to read until she felt comfortable finishing her letter. Lena is a very thorough reader and puts a great deal of thought into her writing.
(Appreciation of reading, desire to continue reading; Observation 4)
Two students chose to use their personal time at home to continue reading the books they had selected to discuss through dialogue journals. Ethan spends much of his time reading at home, and Nora was very excited to read books on her new Kindle.

Ethan: “I left my book at home, but I read a lot of it. Can I write about all of the stuff I remember?”
His willingness to read at home shows how much he enjoys it.
(Appreciation of reading, personal time; Observation 4)

Nora: “I got a kindle for Christmas, and the book I am reading is on it. Is it okay if I just start my letter?”
Teacher: “Do you feel like you can remember your book enough to write about it?”
Nora: “Yes.” Nora wrote steadily for about fifteen minutes. I could see her neat, precise cursive. Nora values reading outside of school. She was very excited to get a kindle for Christmas.
(Apppreciation of reading, personal time; Observation 4)

A number of comments related to the critical appreciation of reading had to do with how the student was progressing along in their text. The designated time for dialogue journals helped students to stick with a book. Students of all achievement levels were able to experience the joy of progressing through and finishing a good book. Anna had been very quiet about the dialogue journal process in the beginning, but in Observation 6, she shared her joy with me in the progress she had made in her book.

Anna: “I’m almost done.”
Me: “Wow. You are getting close!”
Anna: I think I know who is going to win the contest.
Me: Who do you predict?
Anna: I think Judy is going to win.
Me: Oh, man! I still hope Stink wins.
Anna is very excited to be so far along in her chapter book. Her showing me the progress she has made tells me she is gaining confidence as a reader.
(Appreciation of reading, progress made; Observation 6)
In my first observation, Mason very strongly stated that he did not like reading; however, by Observation 5, he was proudly telling me about finishing my book recommendation, How to Eat Fried Worms.

Mason: “I haaaaatttеее reading.” Mason and another male student were the biggest naysayers while the rest of the class was interested in reading and writing in a dialogue journal. (Unfavorable opinion of reading; Observation 1)

Mason: “Here, Miss Armstrong. I already finished it.”
Me: “You did?”
Mason: “Seriously. It was really good.”
Me: “Wow, Mason! That’s great. Did you like it?
Mason: “Yeah, it was really, really good.”
Me: “I can’t wait to hear more about what you thought of it in your writing.” (Appreciation of reading, progress made; Observation 5)

In Observation 2, Nora was already proud of the progress she had made in her book.

In Observation 5, Jane could hardly contain her excitement about finishing Skylark.

Nora: “I finished my letter. I’m already on chapter 2.”
Nora was proud of what she had accomplished so far in her text and in her dialogue journal. (Appreciation of reading, progress made; Observation 2)

Jane showed me she was in the final pages of Skylark. She also whispered excitedly to me that Sarah is going to have a baby! (Appreciation of reading, progress made; Observation 5)

The students would oftentimes speak to me about their favorable, or in Cameron’s case, unfavorable opinions of their books. This practice of letting me know what they thought about their book became more common once we had built a positive rapport with one another. The first instance of expressing a favorable opinion of a text came during Observation 3 from Jane.
Jane called me over to show me her new chapter book by Patricia MacLachlan. We shared a brief conversation about how we loved Sarah Plain and Tall. (Favorable opinion of text; Observation 3)

When I noticed Gavin had been reading the same book since launching dialogue journals in Observation 4, I commented on the fact. Gavin then stated his opinion of the book as a reason for sticking with it.

Teacher: “I see you are reading the same book as last week.”
Gavin: “Yeah, I like it a lot.”
Teacher: “Make sure you tell me what you like about it in your next letter.”
(Favorable opinion of text; Observation 4)

Sometimes students wanted to show me specific parts of their books that they liked.

In Observation 6, Jane demonstrated an appreciation for the humor and language used in the book. In Observation 7, Mason demonstrated an appreciation for the illustration in the graphic novel he was reading.

Jane: “Miss Armstrong. Look at this song that Caleb made up.” Sings the song and laughs
Me: That Caleb is a funny kid, isn’t he?
Jane: Oh, yeah.
(Favorable opinion of text; Observation 6)

Mason: “I’m reading a new book!”
He shows me the illustrations and points out a rat.
Mason: “Check out this rat man and look at how fat this one is.”
Me: “Do you like those illustrations?”
Mason: “Oh, yeah. They’re cool.”
(Favorable opinion of text; Observation 6)

Until my eighth observation, no student had expressed an unfavorable opinion of their book. When Cameron told me he stopped reading his book because it was boring, I realized that we had built enough rapport for him to feel comfortable in acknowledging that dislike to me.
Cameron: “I didn’t like my book so I stopped reading it.”
Me: “That’s ok, Cameron. Make sure you write about why you didn’t like it.”
(Unfavorable opinion of text; Observation 8)

When interviewed, each student was asked to describe their feelings, or attitude, about reading and writing in a dialogue journal. Lena and Anna both described the excitement they feel about writing while Gavin cleverly described the process as similar to talking on the phone. Some students, like Cameron and Ethan, liked being able to write about their own book choice. Ethan also noted that he still does not like writing.

How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
I’m so excited when I get to write that I kind of rush. Sometimes I might wake up and start my day feeling blue, but then you show up and it cheers me right up because I know I will get to write. When I was in third grade, I hated recess. But then I started bringing my notebook with me, and it made it so much better because I could write and write and write.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Lena Interview Question 7)

How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
I get excited because when I get an idea I can write it down for you to read.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Anna Interview Question 7)

How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
It’s kind of fun. It’s like talking on the phone but with reading and writing.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Gavin Interview Question 7)

How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
I think it is pretty fun because I get to write about what I pick out to read. I get to choose what I write about.
(Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Cameron Interview Question 7)
How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading? Sometimes it’s boring and sometimes it’s fun. Why is it boring sometimes? Well, I only said that because I don’t like to write. Why is it fun sometimes? I get to write about MY book. (Attitude toward writing in a dialogue journal; Ethan Interview Question 7)

About Text Thinking

Each student’s dialogue journal was highlighted and coded for instances of about text thinking. In their dialogue journals, each student was able to demonstrate a critical appreciation for reading. This about text thinking included offering a critique, or opinion, of the book, appreciating the language of the text, or judging the author’s credibility.

On their own, the students most often offered a critique, or opinion, of their independent reading choice. These opinions were often very vague and did not delve into a reason for producing such an opinion. The critique usually had to do with how the students were feeling about their book in general. The following excerpts from the letters of Ethan, Jane, Mason, and Nora are typical examples of how students would demonstrate an opinion of their book overall.

Illustration 4.52: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 2

Illustration 4.53: Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 4
Illustration 4.54: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 1

I love the book because it’s very interesting and I never get bored with the book.

Illustration 4.55: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 8

So far I love the book it’s exciting.

Illustration 4.56: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 11

I really love James and the Giant Peach so far. It’s adventurous.

Illustration 4.57: Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 1

The thing I really like is the end because I lost off with a snake on the boys leg.

This book made me excited.

Illustration 4.58: Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 7

I finished the book it was really good. I want more Gone books.
Although critiques were the most prevalent form of about text thinking, there were also times when the students would appreciate the language used in the text. In the following three excerpts demonstrating an appreciation for the language being used, this appreciation corresponded with what the student found funny or humorous. In her fourth dialogue journal letter, Anna copied a quotation directly stated by a character that she thought was a funny thing to say.
Jane also copied a direct quotation from her book into her eighth dialogue journal letter. She thought that the song that Caleb, a character in her story, had made up was very funny.

Illustration 4.63: Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 8

Caleb made a song that goes: "Woolly ragwort all around," "Woolly ragwort in the ground," "Woolly ragwort grows and grows," "Woolly ragwort in your nose." After Caleb sang his wolly ragwort song everyone laughed.

In her third dialogue journal letter, Nora responded yes to a prompt about whether the silly tips in her book had made her laugh.

Illustration 4.64: Nora Teacher Response 2

The section why you are late for school sounds like it's full of silly excuses. Did it make you laugh or smile at all while you were reading it?

Illustration 4.65: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 3

I am reading the same book, it did make me laugh.
Through scaffolding from the teacher feedback, two students who very rarely demonstrated deeper thinking were able to engage in text thinking. Gavin and Nora were able to judge the author’s credibility. In their third dialogue journal letters, Gavin trusted the author’s intentions implicitly while Nora noted that she was not really sure if the author had the authority to dole out tips.

Illustration 4.66: Gavin Teacher Response 2

Do you think the author is being silly or do you think he really wants you to use these tips?

Illustration 4.67: Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 3

And were from your note! I think she wants us to do it.

Illustration 4.68: Nora Teacher Response 2

Do you think the author knows what it means to be the best everything?

Illustration 4.69: Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 3

Not sure if the author knows what it means to do the best everything.
Lena demonstrated deeper thinking often in her letters, but she also benefited from the exchange with the teacher when it came to judging the author’s credibility. Lena felt very strongly about her religious beliefs and was angered that the author did not acknowledge religion in his explanation of how the earth was created. Through our exchange, she took a step back and realized that her differing point of view did not mean the author was a liar.

Illustration 4.70: Lena Dialogue Journal Letter 8

Illustration 4.71: Lena Teacher Response 8

That's an interesting point you made about the author's craft. Do you think he feels like he is telling lies? Maybe he just has a different point of view.
Common Patterns Across Focal Children for Critical Appreciation of Book and Reading Attitude

Analysis showed all students indicated a positive attitude toward dialogue journals and an appreciation for the texts they had chosen to read. All students, no matter their achievement level, who demonstrated a positive attitude toward writing in the dialogue journal indicated a willingness to stay on task, an acceptance of the dialogue journal expectations, and a desire to communicate with their audience. Critical appreciation was demonstrated through comments related to the desire to continue reading, the choice to read during personal time, and the excitement about progressing through a text by both average and higher achieving students.

Students of all achievement levels demonstrated about text thinking in their dialogue journal entries. This about text thinking included offering a critique, or opinion, of the book, appreciating the language of the text, or judging the author’s credibility.
Summary

Students who were engaged in both their reading and writing were more likely to have produced dialogue journal letters that demonstrated comprehension. These students were more likely to be the higher-achieving students like Jane and Ethan. Students who were engaged in neither their reading nor writing, reading but not writing, or writing but not reading were more likely to produce vague entries that lacked deeper thinking and demonstration of comprehension. Any student could demonstrate this lack of engagement, but the students most consistent in demonstrating these behaviors were the low and average achieving students.

When writing in a dialogue journal was first introduced, many students’ letters consisted solely of within text thinking; however, as the students became more comfortable with the process of reading and writing in their journals, the retellings and summaries were accompanied by instances of beyond text thinking. The higher-achieving students were more likely to demonstrate beyond-text thinking with no prompting from the teacher’s feedback, but all students no matter their achievement level were able to demonstrate beyond text thinking when responding to the written feedback from the teacher. Students reading nonfiction showed a greater tendency to solely retell or summarize in their letters, no matter their achievement level.

When dialogue journals were first launched, I observed students of all achievement levels making checks on their dialogue journal checklists as they wrote their letters. This behavior ceased once students were comfortable with the process of writing in their dialogue journals.
The most commonly observed behavior was the student reading or rereading their letter from the teacher before beginning to write their next letter. Unlike the checklists, the observed behavior of students using the teacher’s feedback continued for the duration of the study. Students of all achievement levels spent time reading the feedback from the teacher. Students who changed their book often were less likely to consistently respond to the teacher’s prompts or questions while students who read their books for an extended period of time were more likely to respond to teacher prompts.

Analysis showed all students indicated a positive attitude toward dialogue journals and an appreciation for the texts they had chosen to read. All students, no matter their achievement level, who demonstrated a positive attitude toward writing in the dialogue journal indicated a willingness to stay on task, an acceptance of the dialogue journal expectations, and a desire to communicate with their audience. Critical appreciation was demonstrated through comments related to the desire to continue reading, the choice to read during personal time, and the excitement about progressing through a text by both average and higher achieving students.

Students of all achievement levels demonstrated about text thinking in their dialogue journal entries. This about text thinking included offering a critique, or opinion, of the book, appreciating the language of the text, or judging the author’s credibility.
CHAPTER FIVE: CONCLUSIONS AND IMPLICATIONS

Overview

This study was conducted to explore how one class of fourth grade students’ learning was supported through using dialogue journals to discuss independent reading. The students read from their independent reading choices and responded in their dialogue journals twice per week for five weeks. In the fifth week, eight focal children were interviewed about using dialogue journals. The researcher analyzed the data from observation field notes, students’ dialogue journal writing samples, the teacher’s journal feedback, and the students’ interviews.

The researcher found evidence of reading and writing engagement to be a precursor to demonstrating comprehension (Kelley & Clausen-Grace, 2009). Students demonstrated their comprehension through within, beyond, and about text thinking (Pinnell & Fountas, 2009). Within text thinking included summarizing and retelling, and the researcher found that students reading nonfiction were more likely to engage in this literal recall. Students demonstrating beyond text thinking made connections, predicted, questioned, and inferred in their dialogue journal entries. Several students incorporated about text thinking into their dialogue journal letters by critiquing the book or appreciating the language used by the author. The teacher feedback tailored to students’ instructional levels helped to drive all students to deeper level thinking (Werderich, 2002).
The researcher found evidence of students’ thinking processes as they wrote for a specific audience. Students initially used the dialogue journal checklist as a guideline for structuring their responses, but this behavior became less observed as they internalized the expectations. Students read and responded to the feedback of the teacher by answering any questions posed by the teacher in her letter. This use of teacher feedback was more consistently demonstrated by students who read their book for an extended period of time (Hancock, 1993). In the interviews, many students revealed how they kept their audience in mind by trying to pick out the most interesting, or “juiciest,” details in the book to share.

Students’ critical appreciation of books was demonstrated through their written and spoken critiques of their independent reading choices. Many students demonstrated a positive reading attitude as well as a positive attitude toward writing in their dialogue journals. Students were excited to read the teacher’s response and keep the exchange going.

Conclusions

The analysis of observations, interviews, and students’ dialogue journal writing samples and the teacher’s written feedback resulted in several conclusions about the fourth grade students in this study.

Writing in a dialogue journal about independent reading held students accountable for engaging in and thinking about their texts. A major concern prior to this study was how to hold students accountable for their independent reading, and dialogue journals were successful in addressing this issue. Students like Anna who demonstrated avoidance behaviors early on in the process soon learned that they must actually pay attention to their reading in order to successfully write a dialogue journal letter. Engaged, effective reading was a precursor to thoughtful writing (Kelley & Clausen-Grace, 2009).

Students were able to demonstrate their comprehension in their dialogue journals. By analyzing and coding the focal children’s dialogue journal entries, students demonstrated summarizing, retelling, making connections, predicting, questioning, inferring, critiquing, and appreciating author’s language. Students incorporated within, beyond, and about text thinking within their writing (Pinnell & Fountas, 2009).

The teacher was able to individualize her instruction according to her students’ needs within their dialogue journals. If a student was relying solely on summarizing or literal recall, the teacher was able to question or prompt the student to engage in deeper thinking like making a connection. The dialogue journal became a forum for personalized instruction (Werderich, 2002).

Students demonstrated deeper understanding of fiction as opposed to nonfiction. Students require more explicit instruction in responding to factual text and would benefit from practice in questioning and making inferences from informational text. Students took on an efferent, or cognitive, purpose in responding to nonfiction texts, while a deeper transaction with the text would have been maintained by blending both efferent and aesthetic responses (Rosenblatt, 1995).
Instructional Implications and Recommendations

The research in this study offers several implications and recommendations for fourth grade teachers interested in using dialogue journals to support independent reading.

The students in this study did not receive any explicit instruction in the type of reading strategies the researcher was looking for. Teachers wishing to use dialogue journals to support independent reading should make explicit the connection between the comprehension strategies modeled and used during guided practice and the desire to see these strategies used and applied with dialogue journals (Fisher & Frey, 2008).

When writing questions for students in their dialogue journals, the researcher recommends building off of each student’s individual response. Questions that came from the natural give and take between teacher and student made the dialogue journal feel more like a written conversation than a list of comprehension questions (Fuhler, 1994). Be careful to not include too many questions as this may overwhelm the student. Although it is unlikely teachers will have read all of the books students choose for independent reading, the teacher should familiarize herself with the content of the books to be better equipped to respond to students’ dialogue journal entries.

Dialogue journals should be read and responded to on a regular basis. Students were excited and motivated to read and exchange letters. Too long of a lapse of time between responses may take away from this motivation. Students may also have forgotten their line of thought if a lengthy amount of time has passed, and this will detract from their understanding. Extending students’ written responses to higher levels of thinking requires consistent teacher feedback, or support coming from the teacher through prompts, questions, or reinforcement (Hancock, 1993).

A varied selection of books with different genres and levels available is recommended. Students need motivation in selecting and sticking with an appropriately-leveled text for an extended period of time. This is important because students who read the same book for a longer period of time were more likely to demonstrate deeper comprehension. When students continually write in the process of reading a text for an extended period of time, they reach higher levels of understanding (Hancock, 1993).

Limitations

A limitation to this study is the small number of participants. As a result, there is not a large degree of generalizability to other studies that a larger population would have afforded. Another limitation to this study is the length; five weeks was not a long time for the researcher to observe the growth in students’ responses in their dialogue journals over time. A year-long study would have been more appropriate.

Suggestions for Future Research

The purpose of this study was to explore how writing in a dialogue journal about independent reading impacted students’ learning as it related to comprehension, writing for a specific audience, and critical appreciation of books and reading attitude.
While the research did expose information about this purpose and its components, further research could provide more information.

This study could be conducted again with different grade levels or classrooms. An interesting possibility to follow would be observing how fourth grade students in an inclusion classroom respond to the dialogue journal process. Dialogue journals could also be used with the primary grade levels, as suggested by Ethan in his interview. Analysis of dialogue journals from a larger number of students could yield more information about the benefits of individualizing instruction.

This study could be conducted over the course of a year. The data could be collected and analyzed to answer how students advance to higher levels of thinking over time. A study of multiple years may indicate if students continued to demonstrate comprehension strategies as they moved up in grade levels.

Another avenue further research could take would be to incorporate technology into the dialogue journaling process. Composition notebooks could be replaced with email or a classroom blog. Technology could be a motivating factor for students who do not like to write.

Final Thoughts

As this study suggests, using dialogue journals as a support for independent reading has the potential to address students' literacy needs through individualized instruction. Dialogue journals provide students with an authentic purpose for writing and a specific audience to write for. Students consistently engage in reading and then expressing their comprehension in writing. Their learning is personalized to their needs as the teacher carefully chooses what questions to ask and how to prompt for deeper understanding (Werderich, 2002). In today’s classroom, there is a need for evidence-based practices that stretch students’ thinking and comprehension, and dialogue journals are one such promising teaching practice.
References

Appendices

Appendix A

Observation Field Notes

Date: _____________

Grade Level: ______

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Appendix B

Student Interview Questions
Participant:
Date:

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Connect with the Book</th>
<th>Analyze and Critique the Book</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• What is your reaction to the character or characters?</td>
<td>• What do you like or dislike about the book?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• How does the book remind you of your life?</td>
<td>• Find places where the author gave good description.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• How does the book remind you of other books?</td>
<td>• Why do you think the author wrote the book?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Is this book similar or different to other books by the same author?</td>
<td>• What did you find interesting or surprising?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• At first I thought the book was about ____ but now I think it is about ____.</td>
<td>• How does the author make you feel?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• What will you remember most about the book?</td>
<td>• What do you notice about the illustrations?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Is there anything you find confusing or have questions about?</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Appendix D

Dialogue Journal Checklist

☐ I wrote the date.
☐ I have a greeting and a closing.
☐ I included the title, author, and how far along I am in the book I'm reading.
☐ I wrote about what happened AND what I think.
☐ I responded to what my teacher wrote to me.
☐ I reread my letter to make sure it makes sense.
☐ I have written at least five sentences.
Appendix E: Observation Field Notes

Observation 1
Date: January 23, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group Lecture: The researcher introduced her thesis project and reviewed what the content of the dialogue journals would be using sample letters. Each student received a bookmark listing questions to jumpstart their thinking. Students taped the dialogue journal checklist to the inside cover of their composition notebook.</td>
<td>The students were very responsive to the dialogue journal introduction. Many of the questions were in regards to how often I would collect and respond to their letters. There were some mixed emotions about reading/writing. Mason and another male student were the biggest naysayers while the rest of the class was interested. Lena’s questions about reading books she has written shows her enthusiasm as a writer (she writes her own newspaper). Gavin was quietly excited about the idea and waited to personally ask me about his book choice. Anna lacks confidence in reading/writing and is shy speaking in front of a group so she had no questions.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>During introduction of content:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Lena: “Can I read books that I’ve written?”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Nora: “We [the class] should start doing it for “Fun Friday.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Male student: “I haaaattteee writing.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Mason: “I haaaattteee reading.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Ethan: “We are going to need a long time. I’m reading a 17 book series.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>During passing out of bookmarks:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Gavin: “Can I read this book?” Researcher responded yes and he smiled as he tucked his new bookmark inside.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>During reading/taping of checklists:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Jane: “This seems reasonable.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Anna was very quiet during this time as she looked through her new materials.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Independent Practice:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Students were asked to select a chapter book to read for fifteen minutes. At the end of the fifteen minutes, the students were asked to write their first letter to Miss Armstrong about what happened in their book and what they think.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>During book selection/reading:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Lena pulled a book out of her pouch (bag on the back of each student’s chair) immediately. Settled right into book with it closely pushed up to her face.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-Anna was the last student to select a book and spent most of the fifteen minutes for reading looking around the classroom library.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-One female student was pointing out a part in her Judy Blume book to the girl next to her and smiling.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

98
- Ethan pulled book out of his pouch and had his head on his elbow, grasping book in one hand.

During journal writing:
- Gavin was one of the first to begin writing in his journal. His neighbor, a low-achieving girl, tried to take his book but he grabbed it back and continued writing without saying anything to her.
- Anna continued reading before being given a reminder to start writing. She opened her journal then got out her chapstick. She received another reminder. She wrote the date and greeting and checked those items off the list.
- Lena glanced around to check on others. She then looked over her checklist and started writing.
- Ethan: “What could I write? Oh. Okay. The date.”

then turn around, and put it back. This process went on nearly the entire fifteen minutes. Ethan and Lena were very engaged in their reading. Gavin showed his excitement about writing a letter again when he grabbed back his book to make sure he stayed on task. He would not allow any distractions from the task at hand. Lena was interested in seeing what others were up to before she began writing. She is a high achiever and cares a lot about doing what is expected. Ethan has a sarcastic nature, but he did demonstrate that he understood the use of the checklist.
Observation 2
Date: January 25, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group: I explained to students that the first thing I wanted them to do was read my letter responding to their first letter. If I asked them a question, I reminded them to answer it in their next letter. “Just like last time, I want you to read your book for the next fifteen minutes. Then I am going to give you time to write a letter explaining what happened AND what you think.”</td>
<td>Ethan was able to answer his own question about what to do when starting a new book. This tells me he understands what I am looking for in his dialogue journal letters (their thoughts about what they are currently reading).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethan: “What if I want to write about a different book I’m reading now? Do I answer your questions about the old one first and then write about my new one?” Me: “Yes! That’s exactly what I’d like anyone who has changed books to do. Answer my questions first. Then tell me about your new book.”</td>
<td>Mason showed an engagement with reading his R.L. Stine book. Anna had much more time to read when she already had a book picked out. Lena continues to act like an engaged reader. Jane was very excited about her new Christmas anthology and was engaged in reading. Nora seems to be more interested in writing the letter than reading; however, she must engage in her reading to have an appropriate topic to write about. Cameron demonstrated a lot of confidence in his own abilities to read and write. Jane demonstrated that she was thinking about her reading. She made a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>During independent reading:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason immediately pulled out his R.L. Stine book from the previous week.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anna pulled the book she started last week out of her pouch and immediately began reading.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena took a new book from her pouch, tucked her seat in tightly to her table, and sat upright.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jane informed me she was changing from Glass Castle to her Christmas book from home. It is an anthology of Christmas stories and songs. Ethan immediately began his letter because he had read several chapters of his book at home. Nora checked the clock several times. In a whisper, she said “Kay. It’s almost time to stop reading…” as she closed her book. Gavin sat quietly with his head on his arm reading. He began writing early.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Cameron was very focused on his book. During writing of dialogue journal letter: Cameron began using his dialogue journal checklist without any prompting. When I came over to check on him because he had missed the introduction day, he had already made a series of checks. When asked if he needed any help, he shook his head no and said “I get it.”

Jane was writing and reading at the same time. She called me over to show me that she had first thought the story was about Jesus, then thought it was actually about kittens being born, then confirmed that she was right the first time.

Ethan: Scanned over his journal, said “way more than 5 sentences,” and slammed his journal shut. Nora: “I finished my letter. I’m already on chapter 2.” Mason finished his journal entry early.

Anna asked to use the bathroom before starting to write. She returned and sat staring at the page and flipping between pages. When I came over to prompt her to write, she had the date and greeting. I asked her what her book was about, and she gave me a verbal explanation about the contest Judy Moody and her brother are in. I asked her if she could write about that contest in her journal, and she nodded yes.

Lena: Down on one knee at her seat. Flipping between journal pages as she writes.

despite his sarcasm, Ethan seems to want to do the right thing. His comment about the 5 sentences shows he was thinking about what is required by his audience. Mason continued to be engaged with the process during writing.

Anna avoided the writing task at first. She gets anxious about some schoolwork; however, when I passed by her towards the end of the time allotted for writing, she had written several sentences showing me that she retell what she had read about. Lena’s flipping between two pages shows me she was using the feedback provided in the teacher response in her next letter.
Observation 3
Date: January 30, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| Whole Group: Mrs. Vendetti asked students to teach her about their journal process.
Mason: “What we write in our journals is kind of like our four square summary sheets. We tell her what we like and don’t like too.”
Ethan: “We start it ‘Dear Miss Armstrong’ because it’s a letter to her.”
Nora: “We can use this purple sheet that she taped to our journals to check off what to write.”
Lena: “Sometimes she might ask someone a question in her letter and we have to answer it in our next letter.”
I complimented the group on their explanation and reminded them along with telling me what happens I wanted to know what they think. I also prompted them to look again at their bookmarks. The prompts on the bookmarks would give them ideas of what to write about while the checklist would help them edit.
During independent reading:
Ethan showed me the book he had brought from home that he is still reading. He read steadily and quietly for fifteen minutes.
Mason continued reading his R.L. Stine book.
Anna continued reading her Judy Moody book.
Towards the end of the fifteen minutes for reading, she was chatting and laughing with the girls at her table.
Nora read steadily for the fifteen minutes.
Lena pulled out the same book and after a brief perusal of it, immediately began writing a letter in her journal.
Gavin read quietly for fifteen minutes. | Mason, Ethan, Nora, and Lena were able to partially verbalize how to use a dialogue journal. Other students also contributed to the conversation talking about how they discuss books of their own choice.
Mason was engaged in his reading.
Anna exhibited a few avoidance behaviors during the reading portion; however during writing she was focused and productive. Her teacher was very excited about the success she showed during test-taking writing today. Perhaps she feels that her writing is valued and that makes her more excited to do it.
Lena is very caught up in the Big Bang Theory vs. creation debate, and is standing firmly behind her beliefs. She definitely has a point of view. That may be the newswoman coming out in her.
Gavin continues to be a very... |
Cameron read steadily for fifteen minutes. Jane called me over to show me her new chapter book by Patricia Mac Laughlin. We shared a brief conversation about how we loved Sarah Plain and Tall.

During writing:
Anna wrote consistently for the entire designated fifteen minutes. She flipped back between the pages in her book and journal. Nora reread the teacher feedback and highlighted the two questions that had been asked in the teacher’s letter. Cameron used the checklist as he wrote his letter. Gavin finished his letter early. Mason visibly flipped between pages in his dialogue journal. Ethan complained that he only had 2 pages left in his chapter before getting to work on his journal letter. Lena came over to show me that she had written “Christ” in capital letters for to highlight the word three times. She begged me to read her letter before I left. Jane scanned her bookmark briefly before beginning to write her letter.

In a brief conversation with Mrs. Vendetti, she mentioned that Anna had successfully finished the writing portion on her social studies test today. Anna typically does not finish in the designated time frame, but today she was only a few minutes behind the other students.
Observation 4
Date: February 1, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group: The class was asked to read for fifteen minutes until the timer went off then to begin writing in their journals.</td>
<td>Lena is very passionate about the big bang vs. creation debate, and her eagerness to answer my questions shows she enjoys discussing it. She must think deeper about her beliefs so that she can expand on them in her letter. The fact that she spent nearly fifteen minutes answering my questions shows that she is thinking more deeply when she answers.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena: “Is it alright if I answer your questions first?” “Yes.” Lena studied my letter carefully. When the timer went off to begin writing in their journals, Lena commented that she had only just begun to read again after answering my questions in her letter. I told her to read until she felt comfortable finishing her letter.</td>
<td>Nora is very steady in her use of dialogue journals. She is very careful in her writing.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nora: “I got a kindle for Christmas, and the book I am reading is on it. Is it okay if I just start my letter?” Teacher: “Do you feel like you can remember your book enough to write about it?” Nora: “Yes.” Nora wrote steadily for about fifteen minutes. I could see her neat, precise cursive.</td>
<td>Jane takes an interesting approach to writing in her dialogue journal. We are constantly constructing meaning as we read, so I am allowing her to test out her technique of reading and writing at the same time.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jane: “Can I read and write at the same time?” Teacher: “You can try it that way today. Stop to record your thoughts about something you read before you start reading again.” Each time Jane paused to write, she used a different color pen to record her thoughts.</td>
<td>Anna’s progress with the dialogue journals is very interesting. This is a girl who is anxious about any writing task, but she has embraced the dialogue journals.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anna was absent, but the following is a brief conversation with her teacher. Me: I see Anna is not here today, but I wanted to let you know there’s been such an improvement in her letters. The first time we tried the dialogue journals she was stuck and only wrote the title and author, but now she is writing entire pages about her reading. Teacher: That is really interesting. I’m wondering if</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
the positive feedback makes her feel less anxious about writing.
Me: Even after her first letter, I told her what a great start that was and how I couldn’t wait to hear more of her thoughts.
Teacher: Maybe she sees that you read and can understand what she is trying to convey.

Ethan: “I left my book at home, but I read a lot of it. Can I write about all of the stuff I remember?”
Teacher: “Sure.”
Ethan got right to work on his letter, and he spent nearly fifteen minutes writing it.

Mason: Wandered up to the classroom library after reading the newest response in his journal.
Me: “Did you get a chance to read my recommendation?”
Mason: “Yeah. I think I’ve seen that TV show.”
Me: “Does it sound like a book you’d be interested in trying?”
Mason: “Yeah. Do you have it right now?”
Me: “Yes, I do.”
Mason took Fried Green Worms back to his seat and began reading.

Cameron: Pulled out the football book he had been reading from last observation. Cameron looked over the teacher response and then flipped between pages as he started his letter.

Teacher: “I see you are reading the same book as last week.”
Gavin: “Yeah, I like it a lot.”
Teacher: “Make sure you tell me what you like about it in your next letter.”

Ethan is very serious when it comes to his fantasy series. His willingness to read at home shows how much he enjoys it.

Mason’s willingness to try out my recommendation shows that he trusts my opinion. The dialogue journals have helped us to build a rapport with each other and share an appreciation of books.

Cameron was visibly using my feedback in beginning his next journal entry.

My brief interaction with Gavin shows that he likes his book and is continuing to stick with it.
Observation 5
Date: February 6, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group: The class was asked to read for fifteen minutes until the timer went off then to begin writing in their journals.</td>
<td>Mason certainly enjoyed and appreciated my book recommendation. R.L. Stine took him a couple weeks to finish, but How to Eat Fried Worms was completed in less than a week! He is showing a great attitude toward reading, but I think he could spend a little more time on his writing.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason: “Here, Miss Armstrong. I already finished it.”</td>
<td>Ethan continues to read for pleasure at home and shares his thoughts in writing during the journals time.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Me: “You did?”</td>
<td>Cameron showed interesting behaviors while reading the sports magazine. In this less serious type of reading, he took a less serious approach to reading as he scanned what interested him. His looking back and forth tells me he needed help remembering what he had read.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason: “Seriously. It was really good.”</td>
<td>Gavin’s perusal of the pictures tells me that he was appreciating the photography used in the text. When he looks back and forth between book and journal, it warns me that he</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Lena: “Miss Armstrong! I am going to keep reading this book because I am not yet finished with it. We need to find more books like it.”
While reading: “Come look at this. Carbon dioxide in the air is the same kind of gas they use to make soft drinks. It’s like I’m breathing out Dr. Pepper every time I exhale.”
Lena read my letter before she started reading and again after she had read.
Lena: “I guess I’m kind of weird because I don’t like fiction. I don’t know why I don’t like it.”
Me: “That’s not weird. Everyone has their own taste in books. My cousin only likes to read true murder stories. How’s that for weird?”
Lena: “Eww. I do want to read more books about this topic. Not the big bang, the other part.”
Me: “You mean creation?”
Lena: “I mean God.”
Me: “Okay. Do you like stories from the bible?”
Lena: “Yes!!”
Me: “We will have to see what we can find. Make sure you are looking for books from home too in case we can’t find ones you are interested in here.”

Anna’s bookmark shows she is about halfway through her Judy Moody book. She read quietly before beginning her letter.
I noticed she was using bubble letters in her letter so I paused her to tell her not to take up all her time doing bubble letters. She shook her head no and pointed to an illustration in the book that she was replicating. I could then see that the rest of her letter was written in normal handwriting, so I let her continue her efforts.

Jane showed me she was in the final pages of Skylark. She also whispered excitedly to me that is continuing to copy word for word what he has read rather than writing what he thinks.

Lena is very engaged with her reading choice. Her joke about Dr. Pepper tells me she is making connections between what she reads and what she knows, and she is also enjoying her book.
I found our conversation to be very informative in her attitude toward reading. Lena likes to learn new things and make sense of the world around her, which is why she is drawn to nonfiction.

Anna continues to make progress in her book, and she is showing more creativity as a writer. In an effort to help explain the book to her audience, she added an illustration that she found appealing.

Jane continues to have a great attitude toward the dialogue
Sarah is going to have a baby! I told her I would have to bring Sarah Plain and Tall in for her to borrow as soon as possible. Jane showed me that she had written two letters since my last response, and she was working on her third today. She continued to use her different colored pens.

Nora told me that she had finished her book on her Kindle and was going to start a new one at home. Since she hadn’t started the new one yet, I asked her to read something during class that she could write about in her letter before she switched to the Kindle book. During writing, Nora constructed her letter very carefully in her neat cursive.

journaling process. She connected with the family in Skylark and shared in the joy of the characters when she found out Sarah was with child. She reads and writes additional letters on her own time, which tells me she is enjoying Skylark.

Nora continues to be engaged in the dialogue journaling process.
Observation 6
Date: February 8, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group: The class was asked to read for fifteen minutes until the timer went off then to begin writing in their journals.</td>
<td>Lena was off to a great start before she was interrupted by being called from the room for a meeting. When she called me over, she showed her approval of my book recommendation and noted how much she loved the Narnia pop-book she owns.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| Lena: “Miss Armstrong, come here! Narnia is a thumbs up. I have a pop-up book that summarizes the series, and I love those stories.”
Lena continued reading her book about the earth before writing. She had to stop abruptly when she was called to character club. | | |
| Anna: “I’m almost done.”
Me: “Wow. You are getting close!”
Anna: I think I know who is going to win the contest.
Me: Who do you predict?
Anna: I think Judy is going to win.
Me: Oh, man! I still hope Stink wins. | Anna is very excited to be so far along in her chapter book.
Her showing me the progress she has made tells me she is gaining confidence as a reader. She demonstrated some beyond text thinking in our conversation. |
| Jane: “Miss Armstrong. Look at this song that Caleb made up.” Sings the song and laughs
Me: That Caleb is a funny kid, isn’t he?
Jane: Oh, yeah. | Jane is appreciating the humor of the song and connecting with the characters. |
| Mason: “I’m reading a new book!”
Shows me the illustrations and points out a rat
Mason: “Check out this rat man and look at how fat this one is.”
Me: “Do you like those illustrations?”
Mason: “Oh, yeah. They’re cool.” | Mason was appreciating the illustrations included in this graphic novel. It definitely looks like the creepy stuff he is interested in. |
| Ethan: “I remembered my book today!” Holds it up high in the air. | Ethan is very comfortable as a reader. He becomes absorbed in what he is reading. He needed to be prompted to begin |
Ethan read in his usual slouched over state. He kept reading until students were asked to find a stopping point and start their letter.

Me: Gavin, do you have a book picked out?
Looks at neighbor. She passes him a snake book.
Gavin: Yup.
Gavin was done writing very quickly.

Nora is continuing to read a book on her Kindle so she spent time writing her letter based on her memory.

Cameron was absorbed in his book until the students were asked to begin writing. He glanced over the teacher’s letter before beginning to write.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>his letter.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gavin was not very engaged in the process today. Last entry he questioned why he would have to respond to my feedback and avoided answering any questions. The quickness with which he finished today tells me not much deeper thinking was occurring.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nora continues to read for pleasure at home. She was done quickly with her letter, so I am thinking that her letters are less detailed when she has not just been immersed in the book and is instead writing from memory.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>While other students began writing on their own, Cameron needed to be prompted to begin writing. Reads my response before writing his own.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Observation 7
Date: February 13, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Whole Group: The class was asked to read for fifteen minutes until the timer went off then to begin writing in their journals.</td>
<td>Lena’s entry focuses on what she had read in the previous observation and finishing her thought. She did not add anything about what she had read today.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena immediately opened her journal and looked over my response. She reread her last letter, and then turned the page to finish her thought. When she was done writing her letter, she began reading her Story of the Earth book.</td>
<td>Anna is very engaged in the reading and writing process. When she looks from journal to book, it tells me she is focusing on writing what happened in the story.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anna scanned over my response and then began reading her Judy Moody book for fifteen minutes. Anna began writing immediately sometimes looking back at her book.</td>
<td>Cameron has a habit of skipping over responding to my questions when he has started a new book.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameron began a new book today. After reading for fifteen minutes, he very quickly looked over my letter before starting his own.</td>
<td>Nora continues to read for pleasure at home. Her careful study of my letter tells me she was hopefully answering my questions when she began my letter.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nora began writing her letter immediately. She looked over my response carefully and began writing. She is still reading War Horse on her Kindle at home.</td>
<td>Jane continues to be very engaged with the process. She is likely using the teacher feedback in her next letter.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jane read comfortably for fifteen minutes. She flipped between pages of my response and her new letter.</td>
<td>Gavin noted the compare/contrast structure of</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
looked carefully through his text as he added facts to the different areas.

Mason finished his Bones book today. He continues to be enthusiastic about the graphic novel and commented that Mrs. Vendetti needed to add some more of these books to her library.

| The text lent itself to creating a Venn diagram in his journal. |
| Mason continues to be a very engaged reader although his writing meets the bare minimum. |
Observation 8
Date: February 15, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ethan had to make up tests he had missed due to his illness. Anna was absent.</td>
<td>Lena’s perusal of my letter tells me she was responding to the teacher feedback in her next letter.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena is very close to finishing her book, and she showed me that she was on the last two pages of facts. She looked over my letter and began writing.</td>
<td>Mason continues to be an avid reader and a reluctant writer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason needed a reminder to write in his journal. He was very reluctant to begin an entry finished quickly.</td>
<td>Gavin’s looking between text and journal tells me he is using literal information.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gavin spent time organizing information into chart form. He looked often from his text to his journal as he wrote.</td>
<td>Cameron’s willingness to express a negative opinion about a book tells me that a rapport has been built. He felt comfortable telling me he was not into his book.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After reading and writing, Cameron asked if it would be okay to choose a new book because he found his current choice to be boring. I told him that his book choice is completely up to him, and he can decide when to give a book up. He spent some time in the classroom library and showed me a James Howe book that he had found. He was excited to find this book because this is an author he has read before.</td>
<td>Nora’s immediate writing may mean that her letter is vague.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nora started writing her letter immediately.</td>
<td>Jane continues to be enthusiastic about the dialogue journal process.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jane showed me that she was putting Sarah Plain and Tall on hold while she tries out James and the Giant Peach.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Observation 9
Date: February 27, 2012
Grade Level: 4th

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Observations</th>
<th>Interpretations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ethan and Anna were not present in the room.</td>
<td>Lena’s is a very thorough reader and read her nonfiction text from cover to cover. She is looking forward to reading Narnia and has prepared by rereading her pop-up book and watching the movie.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena finished her book today. She quoted a line from the Chronicles of Narnia before she began to read.</td>
<td>Mason continues to be an avid reader and a reluctant writer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason spent very little time writing in his dialogue journal before returning to his new book, The Diary of a Wimpy Kid.</td>
<td>Gavin’s looking between text and journal tells me he is using literal information. The picture book he chose today is a piece of fiction and is an opportunity for him to move away from the literal recall that characterized his responses to nonfiction.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gavin chose to read a picture book today. He looked back and forth from text to journal as he wrote.</td>
<td>Cameron’s is not spending an extended period of time on the books he chooses. I’m thinking he needs something hockey related to hold his interest.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameron chose a new nonfiction book today about reptiles. He looked often between book and journal as he wrote.</td>
<td>Nora’s immediate writing may mean that her letter his vague.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nora started writing her letter immediately.</td>
<td>Jane continues to be enthusiastic about the dialogue journal process. Her incorporation of a sketch tells me she is visualizing what she reads.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jane is enjoying her new book, James and the Giant Peach. She spent time writing and then drew a sketch illustrating one of her favorite scenes that she had read about.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Dear Miss Armstrong,

The title of my book is "Judy Moody Saves the World!". The author that wrote my book is Megan McDonald.

Dear Miss Armstrong,

Hopefully next time you will have more time to write! This is a great start. You used a greeting, the date, and told me the title and author. I’ve heard Judy Moody books are really funny. Maybe next letter you can tell me if you think so too. I’m very excited to see your thoughts about your book.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Anna Dialogue Journal Letter 2

Title: Judy Moody Saves the World

Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Judy Moody wants to go in a crazy strip contest, and the Grand Prize is rocks, rocks, plus your design printed on a crazy strip for one year. Judy Moody's little brother is drawing a blue bat because people don't like bats, but bats eat millions of insects so people should like bats. Judy Moody is drawing a smiling face in yellow, red, blue, green, and purple. In the next chapter, Judy woke up early the next morning. She found her flashlight and a notebook and she tiptoed down stairs to the kitchen and started to save the world. She, Judy Moody, was in a Mr. Rubbish mood. Mr. Rubbish was a Good.
Dear [Name],

That sounds like a pretty cool contest. What is a crazy strip used for? I like both of their design ideas, but I like Judy Moody's little brother's idea a little bit better because he has such an interesting reason for drawing a blue bat. Which crazy strip drawing do you like better? I loved your letter and can't wait to hear more about your book!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

The crazy strip contest is for drawing something on a piece of paper and the judges have to decide which one is the best. I think that Judy Moody's little brother's drawing is better because in the story it said that 4 people were drawing smiley faces, but no one was drawing a bat. In the story Judy tries saving the world by RECLAIMING. Judy's silence tech is giving paper. Every paper has a animal on it. Judy was the only one who raised her hand to go first, but Mr. Rup did not pick her, so he picked Rocky. Rocky got a monkey. Judy finally got pick she was the last one, and there was one more ticket and she got a
Dear,

I can't wait to hear who won the contest. I'm hoping Judy's little brother and his one-of-a-kind bat drawing win! I can't believe that even though Judy was the first one to raise her hand, she was the last one who got to pick an animal. She must feel mad. How would you feel if that happened to you? Did she get to pick an animal she liked still?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mr. Armstrong,

I am not sure who will win the contest, but Judy did not get a share animal. Judy went to the beach. Judy has a bicycle and she can ride it. She cut one of her neighbor's fruit trees. Judy was looking for a stamp that had a picture of one. Judy did not find it.
beetles live along sandy beaches. Judy and Franck - her friend decided to draw a poster that said:

Save the North East! It was funny when Franck said "Why are you drawing footballs with wings?" But she was very drawing "Northest beach tiger"
Dear Judy,

Poor Judy! She may not like the animal she got stuck with, but she seems to be working hard to learn about it anyway. Did Judy get mad when Frank said her beetles looked like footballs with wings? I hope she thought it was funny too. Let me know when you find out who wins that contest!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

Stink got a pet toad and named it Toady. Judy, Frank, and Rocky were going to let it go because Judy wanted to save the world. Stink got mad when he found it was his fault because he put Toady in a tent he made but he knew that it couldn't be his fault. So Stink told Judy, 5 and Stink's mom and Dad, and Dad said, "I can't get in trouble by saving the world." So Judy tried giving it a tree but Stink saw her up in the tree and said, "Hey, no fair!" Mom and Dad told you to go sleep to your room.
Dear Judy,

I know Judy was trying to save the world, but I think she should have asked Stink first before setting Toady free. Do you think she should get in trouble? I don't think she'll be able to live in that tree for long!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

Stink waved an envelope in the air and he yelled, 'Hey you up there, and Judy said, what now? I just got a letter from the crazy slip contest! When Judy, Stink, and Rocky got off the bus the next day, Stink tried to get Judy out of the truck, and Stink said, 'Race you to the mail box.' But it didn't work. Then Stink yelled, 'the crazy slip contest Judy won then Judy ran to the mail box and ripped the envelope open and Judy said, Stink you lied, but it really said Forest winner on the envelope all Judy won was a certificate.'
Appendix G: Cameron’s Dialogue Journal Entries
Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Dear Miss Armstrong,

In my book, The Heist, I can see Chester Dr. Campbell and Harold Houston murdered and so were 2 others. Then Chester came back and now they're missing. Can they say that Chester have that? To the team and the Shangers can they say that it's 153. The game is on June 15th or 16th.

Sincerely,
Dear,

Wow! Sounds like you're getting close to finishing! I liked how you were asking yourself those questions. Do you think the team will find the two dogs? Make a prediction and see if you're right! I'm wondering why all these animals are going missing... what do you think? Keep reading!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
I finished the book, the owner of the place stared them down. They escaped and we got caught.
I have just read about NFL players. These are their names and years in football are Tony Romo 7 years, Matt Schaub 2 years, Chris Johnson 4 years, Joey Gallow 5 years, and Dwight Freeman 6 years.

Dear ,

I've heard about several of those NFL players. Did the author describe any of their accomplishments? I'm wondering which one you think is the best NFL player. I'm glad the animals were able to escape okay in your last book.

Sincerely,
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I read about Jackie Robinson last week. He was born on January 31, 1919, in Cairo, Georgia. They all moved to Jackie's uncle's house. He led in stolen bases and best all around. He won a World Series and in 1949 he won the MVP.

Sincerely,
Dear,

You wrote a lot of great facts about Jackie Robinson. Now I want to hear more about what you think. He won a lot of awards/honors. Why do you think he was so successful? What made him different from all the other players? He must have worked very hard and been very talented to achieve all that he did.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I read about baseball players' birthplaces. Some facts:

Ken Griffey Jr. was born on May 21, 1969, in Donora, Pennsylvania.

Juan Rodriguez was born in Mexico on November 30, 1971.

Alex Rodriguez was born in New York, New York.

Sincerely,
Dear,

I think it's interesting that Alex Rodriguez is from New York City because he plays for the New York Yankees. He still gets to live and play baseball where he grew up. I saw you reading the Sports Illustrated, and I want to hear more about what you think instead of just facts next time. Tell me what you think is interesting.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I read the Headless Horseman of Sleepy Hollow. It is a book about a kid named seeing a ghost. The ghost is a horseman. The horseman is a ghost. I think it was a lot of ghosts. What do you think?

Sincerely,
Dear,

The author R.L. Stine is known for being super creepy, so I bet your prediction is right. I think there are a lot of ghosts partying too. Have you read any R.L. Stine books before? He was my brother's favorite author.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Cameron Dialogue Journal Letter 7
Cameron Teacher Response 6

Dear Mrs. Armstrong

I am now reading "Let's Get Invisible." Max is a boy, my age. He was at a birthday party, and they got to tie off their door to an extra room with a mirror and it's a magic mirror. Sincerely,

Dear

That magic mirror sounds interesting. Do you think it will make him invisible? That would be pretty cool. I'd love to be invisible for a day!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
I found when they met with a friend and the crazy hair and the glasses made me think that left off was when they went to the store. I stopped reading the book and thought it was

Sincerely

Dear,

Since you are the reader, it's your choice whether to finish a book.
Hopefully you will like the one you picked out now better. You've read books by this author before so I think you will. Why do you like James Hunt's books?

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Today I read about lizards and snakes. Lizards and snakes are both reptiles. Lizards have four legs, run fast, and have good eyesight. Snakes have no legs, eat meat, live one season, prey on other animals, and no eyelids.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

Dear [Signature],

Those are some interesting facts about snakes and lizards. Did you know that snakes didn't have eyelids? I wonder how they blink... Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Appendix H: Ethan’s Dialogue Journal Entries
Ethan Dialogue Journal Letter 1
Ethan Teacher Response 1

Dear Miss Armstrong,

The battle begins tomorrow. I am on chapter four of our Greek mythology lesson. I think it has a lot of interesting elements. I really enjoyed the books. Please respond promptly.

My question is:

Dear,

I have not read this book, but I took Latin as my foreign language in high school, so I know about Greek mythological creatures. What did the three kids get attacked by? Did they survive? I bet that three-headed dog was Cerberus. He guards the entrance to the Underworld. Let me know what you think!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
The three kids got attacked by the big, brown wolves. They survived. Now I am changing my book to The Edge Chronicles and it's a really good book and I am reading the first books of The Red Queen. This book about a skilled young wolf fights for his life in the heights until Skylighter and after him some was to go through with a friend. But when it leaves he has to go through dangerous forest. It will tell you some of the animals and what they can do.
Dear [Name],

This does sound like a good book. You said Twig thinks he is a woodtroll until sky pirates are after him. Why do you think the sky pirates are after him? Maybe he's something more important than a woodtroll...

I can't wait to hear about this dangerous forest. I bet Twig will run into more trouble than just those sky pirates. What do you think?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

The sky pirates are attempting to kidnap the town, but they were thought to be too small to get away. I don't know why they chose such a dangerous place. The ship commander was who hired the pirates to pull up the swamp. That's all they told me.

Dear,

Yikes! It sounds like Twig is just going to run into more and more trouble. I kind of feel bad for Twig because it seems like a case of mistaken identity. Do you think Twig is really a good pirate? Maybe he was just in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
I agree, Twig went off the cliff in the last hour of the book and then had to survive a bunch of different tribes of people and trolls and animals. It's starting to get really, really, really good some weird troll just saved him from drowning in mud. I wonder what's going to happen next! (I)

Dear [Name],

I wonder what is going to happen next too! Twig's life and fight for survival is filled with action. Why do you think the troll who saved him is weird? Why does it take so long to know Twig is a pirate?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

It takes so long to find out things written because it takes a long time to find twig. I think the Troll that saved twig is weird because if you were an evil Troll out of honor, would you have a heart?

I think the Troll wants twig to do something for him because that troll is weird.

Dear,

You're right. That troll is weird... or maybe he isn't so evil after all. He probably does want Twig to do something for him. There's a saying "No good deed goes unpunished." What do you think he will want Twig to do for him?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong

Instead of finding a new friend, something has just disappeared again. We all found a new family of trolls and were looking for us. He's not a troll, either. I wonder how it's going to turn out too. Could you imagine not being allowed to talk? I hope Twig doesn't go crazy before he finds a way out of this one.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Appendix I: Gavin’s Dialogue Journal Entries

Gavin Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Dear Miss Arms特朗,

I read How to Survive almost anything. Storm Calculator when you hear thunder count the seconds when lightning flashes divide it by 5.
This is on p.9. (X) (Boom) 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 (Flash) 10 \times \frac{5}{5} = 2 miles away. Hide under a small tree when outside in a storm
Hot Lightning strike the highest thing don’t let it be you.

Sincerely
Dear,

This book sounds like it has a lot of important information. Do you think you'll ever use any of the survival tips? I hope that you don't have to! What do you think about hiding under a small tree during a lightning storm? I think it might be safer to lie flat on the ground or in a ditch.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I'm reading how to survive bullies on this page. #1 Ignore the bully. EX: bully: closed Kid: hi #2 Use reverse psychology that means do the opposite. EX: bully: loser! Kid: I went to class.

#3 Agree with the bully. EX: Weirdo! Kid: thanks for giving a compliment.

Answers to question 1st quarter:
2nd: qualifications

Sincerely
Dear,

This sounds like a book of lists, and this bully one seems funny. Do you think the author is being silly or do you think he really wants you to use these tips? I bet if you thanked a bully for calling you a weirdo the bully would be pretty confused! I can't wait to hear more about what you think about these tips.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Don't cross the street with a phone. Even me I have a phone. Because care will hit you. [Can hurt adults too.]

Blow, blow. To keep a phone in a pocket. She will do.

An answer from your note I just think. Hear she wants us to do it.

Sincerely.
Dear ,

I will be sure to keep my phone in my pocket anytime I am crossing the street! I love how you applied the author's tips to your own life. That tells me you were thinking about your reading. The phone tip seemed like better advice than calling a bully a weirdo. Do you think the author gives good advice/tips?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Making the trail mix:
1. Get a bag of granola bars
2. Add nuts
3. Add raisins
4. Add granola
5. Add protein: rice, corn, nuts
6. Add milk
7. Add shredded coconut
8. Add pecans
9. Stir
10. Enjoy

Answer: Alive.

Love,

P.S. The bully called him a weirdo.
Dear,

Yum! That's probably my favorite list so far because I love to eat trail mix. What's your favorite list so far? Why is it your favorite? You answered yes, the author gives good advice/tips. Why do you think so? I can't wait to hear your thoughts about your book.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

The largest frog is the Goliath frog. It lives in West Africa. Its body may be a foot. It weighs about 6 pounds.

The smallest frog is in Cuba. (No English name) It is a 1/2 inch.

The poison dart frog's skin is poisonous to Indians. Use the poison. This frog lives in South America.

Those were some frog facts.

love,

ps: "Stop Asking Questions!"
I'll never stop asking questions! They help both of us learn more about what you're reading. What would you do if you saw a 10-foot-long egg? I would probably scream and run away. I'm surprised Indians use poison from frogs. Do you think they use it to hurt people?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm reading Snakes Alive in ReptileVision. Scientists killed snakes to collect venom to study. Snakes eat eggs of other reptiles. The egg eating snakes swallow it whole. There are 12,000 species of snakes.

love

PS Can I ask questions and why won't you stop asking them?
Gavin Teacher Response 6

I ask questions to learn more about what you're reading. Yes, you can ask me questions too! I think it's pretty cool snakes can swallow an egg whole. Why do you think they can do that? I would choke if I tried!

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

This is a chart of lizards and snakes.

Sincerely,
Dear,

I love how you compared and contrasted lizards and snakes using a Venn diagram. Did you know lizards were omnivores before you read it? I had no idea they like to eat both plants and meat.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

even a chart about bees. Workers and what they do is shown here.

Scout goes to flower to work. It makes a pattern. It has a dance.

Worker bees work. They go in the flower to get pollen and nectar.

Queen bee lays eggs.

PS: You are the best teacher ever.

Love,

[Diagram of bees and flowers]
Wow! I had no idea that bees must cooperate and work together to keep the hive running smoothly. I think the Queen bee has the easiest job. Who do you think has the easiest job?

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong

P.S. You are one of my best students!!

---

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm reading inside the library. I finished Grace a guy sleeping in his soup and a horse is sleeping in his pocket. After a rainy day, rolls on the floor will be surpés. I finishing sentence at the end, otherwise we really crabby ants don't ask what the chocolate milk is. Giant cookies shrink, mabeyou.
Appendix J: Jane’s Dialogue Journal Entries
Jane Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Dear Miss. Armstrong,

I’m reading the book Glass Castle by Jeanette Wells. The action in the story is the little girl in the story burns her whole body! Then her mom took her to the hospital and the doctor layed her down on a massive tray covered with ice. After that her parents took her home a few months later. Her parents and her brother Brian and her were driving she fell out of the car. She thought her parents would not come to save her but they did. I love the book because it’s very interesting and I never got bored with the book.

Sincerely,
Dear,

I agree that you can never get bored with this book! The little girl in this story is actually the author, Jeannette Wells. A big worry I had when I was reading was whether Jeannette's parents could really take care of their children. She burned her whole body and fell out of a moving car. What do you think about her parents? Are they responsible enough to have kids? Keep reading! It's an interesting book (like you said!)

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I'm reading "The Witness" by Robert Westall. It takes place in Asia. At first, I thought that it's about Jesus being born, but it's about a kitten having kids. I was wrong again. It's about both.

Sincerely,

Dear,

I can tell you are thinking as you read! Sometimes we have to fix up the ideas in our head when we read something proving them wrong. It sounds like the author told the story of Jesus's birth and the kitten being born at the same time on purpose. Why do you think the author would do that?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm reading Skylark by Patricia MacLachlan. The problem is, there's very little bit of water left. So Sarah takes Anna, Caleb, and herself to Maine, but Papa refuses to go because he won't leave his precious land. Also, Maggie, Matt, Violet, Rose, and the rest left the prairie because there's no water in their well. So Sarah was sad. I love this book.

Next, I want to read Sarah Plain and Tall.

Love,

[Signature]
Dear,

It sounds like they are going through a drought on the prairie. Water is so important for survival. Do you think Papa should have gone to Maine with his family? That couldn't have been an easy decision to make. If you love this book, you will definitely love Sarah Plain and Tall. I have a copy you can borrow if you want.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I think Papa should go to Maine because he could die in the drought. I would like if you let me feed Sarah Plain and Tall. Caleb is very upset about leaving Papa. I feel bad about the other leaving which is good but Papa is not. Also Papa is keeping the cow, the cat, Soot, and dogs Nick and Lottie there with him. Anna and Caleb are surprised about how green Maine is. Miss Cornelia, Miss Cornelia who is Cornelia, Maine and she doesn't think any of Maine. Cornelia is careful about the water. She would be a good place to live. Miss Cornelia has a house there to her aunt. I wonder now she going to explain how she knows, Auntie and Caleb because she never knew Sarah got married to someone with Pie!"
I wonder if the aunts are going to like Caleb and Anna.

Love,

Dear Jane,

What a wonderful letter! I love how you kept track of your thoughts in different colors. Anna and Caleb were probably surprised by all the green of Maine because they are used to the dry brown of the prairie. I can't believe Sarah never told her aunts about the kids! Do you think the aunts will like Caleb and Annie? I sure hope they do! Why do you think Sarah never told them about the kids?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I don't think Sarah told the aunts about Anna or Caleb because she wanted it to be a surprise to them. Caleb and Anna finally got to meet Sarah's brother, William. Caleb says he looks just like Sarah Plain and Tall. Anna and I like letters back and forth.

Poor Caleb; he is dreaming about Papa; he misses him so much. I wish the family could reunite. Sadly, they can't because Papa's at the Prairie and Sarah, Caleb, and Anna are in Maine.

Jane

Picture next page
What a nice surprise for the aunts. I love your map. It gave me a nice visual of how far away the family is from each other. Did they ever reunite? I think they should because Sarah is going to have a baby! I'm glad you loved the book!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Dear Mrs. Armstrong, does not know how they are. Then Sarah said she does. Now we're they are.

It's so sad to read about a family being split up in different states. Caleb and Anna are going to a different school.

Love,
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I finished. Sarah going to have a kid. Love,

I'm going to make a chart.
Likes | Dislikes

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Likes</th>
<th>Dislikes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>each other</td>
<td>having no way</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seal</td>
<td>by 2 months</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nick and Lottie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>neighbors</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>water</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>food</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Papa came to Maine in Skylark then it trained in the Prairie so they went back as a family. That was in Skylark. Sarah is writing letters to Anna, Caleb, and Papa and their responding.

She let them know what has a brother with same thing married and Sarah can in can come back. Caleb asked Anna? Is my pace clean? You dirty it to clean.

Caleb made a song that goes:

"Wolly ragwort all around,"
"Wolly ragwort in the ground,"
"Wolly ragwort grows and grows,"
"Wolly ragwort in your nose."

After Caleb sang his wolly ragwort song everyone
I laughed. So far I love the book; it's exciting.

I'm drawing flowers because that's what they talk about.

Bride's Bonnet
Dear [Name],

I'm so glad the family got back together in Skylark! That Caleb is a funny kid - I think he might be my favorite character. Who is your favorite?

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

Sarah taught Anna and Caleb to swim. But, she taught them to swim in the cow pond! Gross!!! My favorite character is Caleb because he is funny.

Love,

Dear,

Eww! That water must have been disgusting! It kind of reminds me of my dad because he used to swim in the Erie Canal. Yuck! What do you think is going to happen next?

Sincerely,
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm reading the book "James and the Giant Peach." The characters are: James, Spider, Miss Spotted, and Miss Spider. I enjoy the book. It's a lot of fun!

Love,

Miss Spider
Dear,

How do you like James and the Giant Peach so far? When I read it, I remember feeling really sad for the way James was treated by his two aunts. I was very glad when the insects became his friends. How about you?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong, I love James and the Giant peach so far. It's adventurous and it was brave of James to try the crystal seedy things from that stranger. I also think Aunt Spilser and Aunt Sponge are very mean.

Sincerely,

[Hand-drawn illustration of a bird and a giant peach]

Caption: Jane is using seagulls to lift the giant peach after the sharks attacked.
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

I'm reading a book called "Tattoo of Death." It is a "Choose Your Own Adventure Book" by L.M. Montgomery.

Dear [name],

The title "Tattoo of Death" sounds very interesting and a little bit frightening. What made you pick it out? I'm not surprised you're reading a "choose your own adventure" book because you're such a great writer. It's like you're in charge of the story. I can't wait to hear more about your thoughts about your book.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

The Tattoo of Death is my book, and I like books that are mine. I'm reading a different book now. The book is called Stay of the Earth by Stuart.

Malini, I was just about to start page 10. I disagree with the entire book so far. It's telling me that barely in 6,000 years everything was created by the 6,000 year old God. But I think that God made it all.

Sincerely,
Dear,

I love how you are thinking critically about your book. You aren't just accepting what the author says. There are huge debates about the big bang theory and creation. I'm not sure if people will ever agree about it. Are there any similarities between the big bang and creation?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mr. Smith:

I've never heard that question before! Never before have I spent Christmas with an animal. I'm a little worried about my parents when I'm not home for Christmas. I have read this book and it was very good. I remember that it was made in the world and it was in a forest. I think that 647 million years ago, there were only 37 people. I have been thinking about this because I am somehow more people know it. Sincerely,
Dear,

I can tell you are very passionate about this subject, and I think that is great that you stand by your beliefs. I also think it's great that you are willing to read about viewpoints that differ from your own.

What do you plan on reading next?

Do you think you'd like to read more about the big bang theory vs. creation?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mrs. Armstrong,

If someone brought up the subject and asked me to read it, I would never shut up about it. If I had to say for the rest of the day, I would go on the lines of "I don't know what I read next, but when I'm done with this, I'm sure it would be nice if the next one was longer." And because there are many things in the book at last, your friend,
Dear [Name],

We will have to be on the lookout for books on that topic. Do you prefer nonfiction books or are you willing to try some fiction? I can't wait to hear more about what you are reading.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Mr. [Missing],

I would prefer nonfiction because I don't trust war very much from the story of the main characters. It is very boring. The stories you wrote aren't made of action-driven.

Your [Missing]
Dear,

When you pointed out that the bubbles in soda were carbon dioxide, I thought the joke you made was very funny! I'm glad that you are learning new things from this book. I called up my friend Katie for Christian book recommendations, and she said that Left Behind and The Chronicles of Narnia are two great series. Both are fiction—what do you think?

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Ms. Armstrong,

Narnia! (Thumb up) I already have a feel-up book that someone got the point and gave me a few copies. But I haven't heard of Left Behind. I'm not very familiar with this book, but it might be interesting. It's been a while since my parents and I saw the movie. So far, so good.

Dear,

No sign of what? I can't wait to hear the rest of your thought."

I'll see if I can track down copies of Narnia and/or Left Behind.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong.
Dear Ms. Armstrong,

Sorry I didn't finish my letter because of character limit. I'm starting where I left off. I'd love creating the world and thanks for the copies.

Your B.S.,

P.S. I might try left side.
Dear,

Good news! I have the first Narnia book in the series. It's called:
the Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe.
I will bring it in for you.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Ms. Armstrong,

Thank you for the best of luck until I see you again.

The question was: what were your notice practical skills. Leave them for the time being.

I'm almost done with my story. Only a few more words.

Thank you for your understanding. I hope to regroup and make this better. I expect the very next one.

Yours, [Name]
Dear,

That's an interesting point you made about the author's craft. Do you think he feels like he is telling lies? Maybe he just has a different point of view. I'm glad you're excited about Narnia!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong

2/7/12
Dear Mrs. Regan,

You were absolutely right about the sea nurse. I'm glad I had the chance to help. I can't help but learn so much from this experience. It's a fact of life, an earthquake.

Sincerely,
Lena
You have such a great attitude toward learning new things. The facts you showed me about the number of earthquakes that happen was very interesting. It's hard to believe the earth is constantly shifting beneath your feet! I can't wait to hear more about your reading.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mr. Armstrong,

The fourth meeting between our lists is next week, but you can hear one more. I have included the x-plane.

Well, learning about German characters

P.S. Long Hall, The King and Queens of Normal.
Appendix L: Mason’s Dialogue Journal Entries

Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 1

Mason Teacher Response 1

Dear Miss Armstrong,

The book I'm reading is R.L. Stine's "Shout of Fear Street: The Boy Who ate Fear Street: The thing I really like is the end because I lost off with a snake on the boy's leg. The boy is at his aunt's house. I read to the 3rd chapter. This book make me excited.

Sincerely,

Dear,...

Great writing! You're pretty brave reading an R.L. Stine book. There's a snake on the boy's leg? That would freak me out! What about you? I'm glad you're excited to read the book. Is R.L. Stine one of your favorite authors?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

So far, I've been doing the boy eating a green jellybaby every day with dish soap. I would not want to do that. No, I would not be afraid of a snake on my leg. Yes, RL Stine is one of my favorite authors. I can't wait to read more.

Sincerely,

---

Dear Miss Armstrong,

The boy is under a curse that why he ate a spider and disintegrate. RL Stine is my favorite author because I like creepy stuff. The boy, he doesn't care. He also ate two baby snails. Alas, people sometimes. I can't wait to read another book.

Sincerely,
Dear,

That green, moldy sponge and dish soap combination sounds disgusting! Why did the boy eat it? I'm hoping he was forced to.

Why is R.L. Stine one of your favorite authors? My brother used to really like his books too because they were so creepy/scary.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong

---

Dear,

R.L. Stine is definitely the creepiest! That poor boy! All the disgusting things he had to eat remind me of another book called How to Eat Fried Worms by Thomas Rockwell. Instead of a curse, the boy is trying to win a bet. Would you be interested in reading it? I have a copy you could borrow.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,
I really like How to Eat Fried Worms. It is very exciting so far.
I read the book so many times. I want to read more.

Dear [Student],

I'm glad to hear that you are excited to read more of How to Eat Fried Worms. I agree that a bet involving eating worms is pretty gross. Some people have tried to have this book banned because they think eating worms is too disgusting for kids to be reading about. What do you think?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 5
Mason Teacher Response 5

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I think it should not. If 5 women were just eating even are women. With other you,
That are easy. The question.

Dear,

You’re welcome! I agree that the book shouldn’t be banned—it’s a great story. I would absolutely pure eating just one worm. I don’t even like touching them. What are you planning on reading next?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

The book I'm reading now is Bone, the earlier is Jeff Smith. I'm on page 82. It's really good. I really want to read more.

Dear

Bone did look like a good book. I really liked those illustrations you were showing me. What is the book about? It looked like some ugly rat creatures to me!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong

It is about tail tails.
I finished the book. It was really good. I want more Bone books. There was this one page where the rat creatures take their tails off. Some parts where funny.

Dear

I'm glad you like the Bone books. Why did the rat creatures take their tails off? It would be kind of funny-looking to see a rat with no tail.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Mason Dialogue Journal Letter 8
Mason Teacher Response 8

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm reading Diary of a Wimpy Kid. So far it's cool. I want to read more.

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I've read four of the Diary of a Wimpy Kid books, and I think they're hilarious! What do you think of Greg so far? He certainly has an interesting view on things.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Mr. Armstrong,

I think Greg does some weird stuff. So far, I'm on page 61. It's been funny. I want to collect all the books. I can't wait to read more.

Dear__,

Why do you think Greg does all that weird stuff? Sometimes I think he is just trying way too hard to be cool. I can see why you'd like to collect those books—they are funny!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I am reading a book called Dolphin Tale by Gabrielle Reyes. It is based on a true story. It is about a dolphin whose tail gets cut off by a fish trap. The dolphins' name is Winter. That's my book!

From,

Dear,

I remember talking about this book with you when you first started reading it. One of the most amazing things about the story is that it's true! I feel bad that Winter's tail was cut off and relieved that they made her a new one. I can't wait to hear about your next book from home!

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I am reading a book called "The Girls Book: How to be the Best Everything." It is written by Julianne Foster. One section of my book is why you are late for school. One example is "I squeezed the toothpaste to hard and spent an hour putting back in the tube."

From,

Dear __________

The section why you are late for school sounds like it's full of silly excuses. Did it make you laugh or smile at all while you were reading it? I think the title is interesting - the How to be the Best Everything part. Do you think the author knows what it means to be the best everything?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Nora Dialogue Journal Letter 3
Nora Teacher Response 3

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I am reading the book “How to Save the Planet” you’d told me was a great book. I do not know if the author knows what it means to save the earth. Everything the time I am reading a passage called Time to Save the Planet. Thought it was interesting. One way to save the planet is to turn off the faucet when you are brushing your teeth.

Sincerely,

From,

Dear Miss Armstrong,

"How to Save the Planet" does sound like an interesting passage. Even the small things, like turning off the faucet when you brush your teeth, add up. Why do you think the author included this passage? The last one (why you are late for school) seemed silly while this one is more serious.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I am reading a book called Judy Moody, Starring the World. I only read 3 pages and do not know who the author is. Judy and her J.P. club think of ways to save the world. It is very interesting.

from

Dear,

This does sound like an interesting book. Do you think Judy and the J.P. club will come up with some good ways to save the world? I'm wondering what they will think of. Does this book remind you of the "How to Save the Planet" passage you wrote about in your last letter?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

No, I do not think Judy Moody saves the world as implied in the passage. How to save the planet is a more complex issue. Judy Moody is not as proactive as before. She does not want to save the world anymore because she cannot think of anymore ways to save the planet.

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm surprised Judy gave up so quickly on figuring out how to save the world, but I guess that is a big job for one kid! What do you think? I can't wait to hear about your next book.

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I have just started War Horse. I only found out the horse’s name and that it is a very long time ago. The horse’s name is Joey. I really love this book. Joey is a Morgan. He is very very powerful.

From,

Dear Joey,

Joey sounds like a very special horse. Since the title is War Horse, it makes me think Joey will go to war. What do you predict will happen to Joey?

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I think Joey grew to love, I think he will return to the little boy. I have read 5 more pages. The horse went off to save with a man, he was taken from a little boy. This book just keeps getting better and better.

Dear Miss Armstrong,

I'm glad you like your book! I hope Joey will return to the boy too. Did the little boy give permission for Joey to go with the man? That's sad that Joey and the little boy are separated.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Dear Miss Armstrong,

War Horse was wayyy too confusing, I started Judy Moody predicts the future, it is a nice good book, Judy loved Mood, rainy day and Magic 8 balls. That's my book.

Dear,

I've given up confusing books too and tried something that's a better fit. I think Judy Moody is the perfect fit since you've read her stories before. What do you like about Judy Moody books?

Sincerely,
Miss Armstrong

215
Dear Miss Armstrong,

I like Judy Moody books because they are funny also. She is a crazy girl. Judy Moody only listens to magic 8 ball. Judy Moody is also crazy in the movie. It is my favorite book.

Dear [Name],

I've heard that Judy Moody has some pretty crazy ideas. I can't imagine only listening to a magic 8 ball. What does she do if she doesn't like the decision? She is a funny girl. I can see why the books are your favorite.

Sincerely,

Miss Armstrong
Appendix N: Student Interviews

Student Interview Questions
Participant: Anna
Date: February 29, 2012

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   It helps me understand my book better because I have to write down what is going on in my book. I have to pay attention.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   I just put down what the characters say or do- basically it’s what I read that day.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   I have to think about what happens more.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   I usually see what questions you have in your letter and answer them. Then I write down what happens in my book.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   First I write the date. Then I write Dear Miss Armstrong. I kind of just go down the list.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yes. The more that I write, the better I get at it. It helps me with ELA writing like comprehension.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   I get excited because when I get an idea I can write it down for you to read.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   I do both, but I really like my book right now. So I just write down that I like it.
Student Interview Questions
Participant: Cameron
Date: March 5, 2012

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   It kind of helps me understand. I guess it probably helps me think about my reading. Like what happened and the different events.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   Basically I pick out what I like the most or what I think is the coolest. I started a few books and put them back if they weren’t interesting.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   I think more about what I should write about so then I pay more attention to the interesting parts in books.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   Mostly I use your feedback by answering back to your letter before I write any new stuff.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   Sometimes I’ll actually check each one off the list when I’m writing my letter. Then I’ll go back and erase my checkmarks.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yeah, it does. When I have to write down answers to your questions, it’s kind of like writing answers to different questions in other subjects. Like social studies or ELA.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   I think it is pretty fun because I get to write about what I pick out to read. I get to choose what I write about.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   Sometimes I would only write about a book once because I didn’t like it very much, or I might tell you this is the last time I’ll be reading it. Then I let you know what my new book choice is. I’m reading another book like Howlday Inn right now and I really like it. I’m trying to stay away from R.L. Stine because I’ve read a lot of his books already this year.
1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   It doesn’t. Most of the books I have reads before and can understand on my own. I think these journals might be better for kids in second grade.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   I usually write down stuff that happened. Sometimes I say what I think about it.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   It hasn’t. I just read like I usually do.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   I answer the questions and that’s all.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   I used it in the beginning, but I don’t really use it anymore.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yeah, probably. If I write more, my handwriting will get better.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   Sometimes it’s boring and sometimes it’s fun. Why is it boring sometimes?
   Well, I only said that because I don’t like to write. Why is it fun sometimes?
   I get to write about MY book.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   I usually just say “I don’t like this book” and then tell you what book I am changing to.
Student Interview Questions
Participant: Gavin
Date: February 29, 2012

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   It helps me because I get to tell other people how I feel about my book. I have to think about what is interesting in my book.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   There are tons of details in my books so I have to pick out the best details to write down in my journal.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   Writing in a journal is like making my own book. It's kind of like a diary because you get to write about what you like. How does knowing you get to write about what you like affect your reading? I will read more and pay closer attention to the stuff in the book that I like because I can write anything that I want down.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   If you ask a question, at the end of my letter I answer them.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   I don't really use it. It's important so I should use it.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yes. It improves my writing. It helps with spelling, ELA, and handwriting. Reading from my book improves my reading.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   It's kind of fun. It's like talking on the phone but with reading and writing.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   If I don't like a book, I put it back and find one with juicy details that I want to write about.
1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   After I read, sometimes I forget what was going on in the book. By writing in my journal, I remember what happens and I can look back through my journal to read what I thought.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   I like to write down the most interesting part. The juiciest parts are what I like to write about.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   It makes me read longer so I can add more details to my writing.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   I answer your questions. I like reading what you think about my book.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   The checklist reminds me to make my letter more interesting. I like to write more than five sentences because less wouldn’t be telling much.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yes. My penmanship gets better, and I have learned how to indent. We use comprehension sheets in ELA. Writing in the journal teaches me how to comprehend my book the same as when we read a book in class. I think I do better on comprehension questions now than without writing in a journal.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   I feel good about it. I really like reading and writing if it is interesting, and it is when I can read and write about what I want to. I also like how it helps me understand my book.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   So far I have really liked my books, so I write that and explain why.
1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?

   Writing in a dialogue journal helps me understand my book because I like writing much more than reading, so it helps me to stay on track. I have to summarize things. It gives me a chance to tell you what I think about my book.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?

   Like I said before, it’s kind of like summarizing the book. I have to put all my ideas down. To give you a visual, it’s like the four-square sheet we use in class.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?

   When I know that I get to write, it actually makes it a little more difficult to read. I might rush though my book to get to writing. Sometimes I graze over a paragraph and have to go back and reread because I wasn’t thinking.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?

   The checklist says to respond to the teacher, so I usually answer your questions. The subject that I was writing about a lot is one that people aren’t really on the same page as me. It was nice to read what you wrote because I like knowing that there’s a person who is on the same page. It makes me feel like I am not the only one.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.

   After I write my letter, I usually look back to see if I did what I was supposed to. I check it off if I did. Then I just keep going back and forth for each one then erase when I’m done.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?

   Yes because it definitely helps with my cursive, and no because the writing is on a different subject. Plus I already like writing. If you gave me 20 documents and two hours to write about them, I would get it done in one hour.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?

   I’m so excited when I get to write that I kind of rush. Sometimes I might wake up and start my day feeling blue, but then you show up and it cheers me right up because I know I will get to write. When I was in third grade, I hated recess. But then I started bringing my notebook with me, and it made it so much better because I could write and write and write.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?

   I usually write my emotions down. I’ll write “I like this part because...”, or “I don’t like this part because...” Sometimes I’ll write down a part that is cool or a part that I think is stupid. I guess you could say I’m an emotional writer and I do a lot of emotional writing.
Student Interview Questions
Participant: Mason
Date: February 29, 2012

1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   It sort of helps me... Yeah, it actually does help me to read and understand more because I don't really read at home ever.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   I write down stuff that I think is interesting. I will write down funny parts too.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   I have to think about what is interesting. It makes me pay more attention to what is going on in the story.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   I answer your questions in sentences.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   I use it to make sure I have all the things I need. Like five sentences.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yeah. It helps me with my homework. During ELA we have comprehension questions. It's kind of like when we have to answer your questions.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   I like it because I get to read more. It also helps me practice writing more.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   I just write if it's a good book.
1. How does writing in a dialogue journal help you understand your book?
   Writing in a journal helps me understand my book because I think about it more than just reading through the pages. I think about what will happen and write it down.

2. How do you decide what to write about in your dialogue journal?
   First I’ll go through your letter to answer any questions. Then I usually talk about what book I’m reading and I will summarize what happens in the book.

3. How has writing in your dialogue journal affected your thinking as you read your book?
   Knowing that I have to write in my journal makes me think and understand more. I think about what will happen and make predictions.

4. How do you use the feedback from the teacher in your letters?
   I usually write the answers to your questions first. Sometimes you write, “What do you think will happen?” so I have to make sure I answer that before I start reading my book.

5. Describe how you use the dialogue journal checklist.
   At the end, when I am all done writing I go back to the checklist. If anything is missing, I try to add it. I also think about the steps while I am writing.

6. Does writing in your dialogue journal help you with the other types of writing you do in school? Why do you think so?
   Yes. It makes me think about what I write rather than writing about what I don’t know. The journal has helped a lot with proofreading. It helps me with comprehension questions in ELA because I have to understand the book in order to go through and write down answers to questions.

7. How do you feel about writing in a dialogue journal about your independent reading?
   I like writing in my journal because it helps me with other writing and understanding my book.

8. How do you express whether you like or dislike a book in your dialogue journal?
   I would say either “I like it because...” or “I dislike it because...” I’ll also tell you if I think that the book is confusing.