

2015

The Stolen-From-Us

Brandon Dixon

The College at Brockport, bdixo1@brockport.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <http://digitalcommons.brockport.edu/jigsaw>

Part of the Poetry Commons

Repository Citation

Dixon, Brandon (2015) "The Stolen-From-Us," Jigsaw: Vol. 2015 : Iss. 1 , Article 31.

Available at: <http://digitalcommons.brockport.edu/jigsaw/vol2015/iss1/31>

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @Brockport. It has been accepted for inclusion in Jigsaw by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @Brockport. For more information, please contact kmayers@brockport.edu.

Brandon Dixon

Final Poem

The Stolen-From-Us

Even the wind howls in remembrance as the students gather in their best purple polo's around the boulder, near the dorm she lived in during her short time here.

Too short a time.

An albino squirrel jumps down from its tree—knowing one of these people will shoo it away with a chocolate-chip cookie if it waits long enough.

The boulder reads:

“It is not the length of life, but depth of life.”

And while her old friends are giving their speeches and everyone around you is crying, all you can think about is how the quote would sound so much better if a simple “the” was added between “but” and “depth.”

The mob walks with heavy feet, dodging the furry rodents
every step of the way, over to the pool
where she spent most of her time, practicing for competitions she would never participate in.

Chlorine burns
your eyes—finally you look like you're crying!
All this because a boyfriend went mad and hit his "love"
again and again
until he was beating a motionless body.

Her face—beautiful,
shines beyond the grave at the crowd here to remember her.

Do you promise?

Never

to harm

your loved ones

as long as you live?

I do.

And you better too.